

Barbarians at the Gates? A Reply to the Critics of the Victims' Rights Amendment

Paul G. Cassell*

INTRODUCTION

The Victims' Rights Amendment will likely be the next amendment to our Constitution. Currently pending before Congress, the Amendment establishes a bill of rights for crime victims, protecting their basic interests in the criminal justice process. Under the Amendment, victims of violent crimes would have the rights to receive notice about court hearings, to attend those hearings, to speak at appropriate points in the process, to receive notification if an offender is released or escapes, to obtain an order of restitution from a convicted offender, and to require the court's consideration of their interest in a trial free from unreasonable delay.<sup>0</sup> The Amendment has attracted considerable bipartisan support, as evidenced by its endorsement by the President<sup>1</sup> and strong approval in the Senate Judiciary Committee at the end of the 104th Congress.<sup>2</sup> Based on this vote, the widely respected Congressional

---

*Professor of Law, Univ. of Utah College of Law (cassellp@law.utah.edu); Executive Board of the National Victims Constitutional Amendment Network. A special note of thanks to the editors of the Utah Law Review for organizing this Symposium and to Susan Bandes, Doug Beloof, Lynne Henderson, Bob Mosteller, Bill Pizzi, and Steve Twist for their energetic participation. This article was supported by the University of Utah College of Law Research Fund and the University of Utah Research Committee. I appreciate suggestions and other assistance from Patricia Cassell, Karan Bhatia, Reg Brown, Edna Erez, Stephen Garvey, Edith Greene, Paul Gewirtz, Joe Hoffman, Bob Keiter, Scott Matheson, John Stein, Marlene Young, and the Symposium participants. With apologies for borrowing a title from BRYAN BURROUGH & JOHN HELYAR, BARBARIANS AT THE GATE: THE FALL OF RJR NABISCO (1990).

<sup>0</sup>See S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. (1999); see also S.J. Res. 44, 105th Cong. (1998) (adopting same list of rights one year earlier). The current text of the Amendment is reprinted as Appendix A to this Article.

<sup>1</sup>See Announcement by President Bill Clinton with Introductions by Vice President Albert Gore and Remarks by Attorney General Janet Reno and Other Speakers on Victims' Rights, June 25, 1996, available in LEXIS, Federal News Service; see also Paul G. Cassell, Make Amends to Crime Victims, WALL ST. J., July 20, 1999, at A22 (noting recent endorsement by Vice President Gore).

<sup>2</sup>See S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 37 (1998) (approving Amendment by 11-to-6 vote). As of this writing, in the 105th Congress the Amendment has been approved by the Subcommittee on the Constitution, Federalism, and Property Rights of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Quarterly has identified the Amendment as perhaps the “pending constitutional amendment with the best chance of being approved by Congress in the foreseeable future.”<sup>3</sup>

As the Victims’ Rights Amendment has moved closer to passage, defenders of the old order have manned<sup>4</sup> the barricades against its adoption. In Congress, the popular press, and the law reviews, they have raised a series of philosophical and practical objections to protecting victims’ rights in the Constitution. These objections run the gamut, from the structural (the Amendment will change “basic principles that have been followed throughout American history”<sup>5</sup>), to the pragmatic (“it will lay waste to the criminal justice system”<sup>6</sup>), to the aesthetic (it will “trivialize” the Constitution<sup>7</sup>). In some sense, such objections are predictable. The prosecutors, defense attorneys, and judges who labor daily in the criminal justice vineyards have long struggled to hold the balance true between the State and the defendant. To suddenly find third parties—rather, third persons who are not even parties—threatening to storm the courthouse gates provokes, at least from some, an understandable defensiveness. If nothing else, victims promise to complicate life in the criminal justice system. But more fundamentally,

---

<sup>3</sup>Dan Carney, Crime Victims’ Amendment Has Steadfast Support, But Little Chance of Floor Time, CONG. QUART., July 30, 1998, at 1883.

<sup>4</sup>I use the term “man” provocatively because certain aspects of the defense resist efforts by feminists to provide justice to victims of rape and domestic violence, who are disproportionately women. See, e.g., Beverly Harris Elliott, President of the National Coalition Against Sexual Assault, Balancing Justice: How the Amendment Will Help All Victims of Sexual Assault (visited March 6, 1999) <<http://www.nvc.org/newsltr/sexass2.htm>> (arguing that Amendment would encourage victims to report and assist in prosecution of acts of sexual violence); Joan Zorza, Victims’ Rights Amendment Empowers All Battered Women (visited March 6, 1999) <<http://www.nvc.org/newsltr/battwom.htm>> (stating that constitutional amendment will help battered women by rebalancing criminal justice system); see also infra note 258 and accompanying text (discussing women and children who have died from lack of notice of offender’s release).

<sup>5</sup>A Proposed Constitutional Amendment to Protect Victims of Crime: Hearings on S.J. Res. 6 Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 105th Cong. 141 (1997) [hereinafter 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings] (letter from various law professors opposing Amendment).

<sup>6</sup>Proposals for a Constitutional Amendment to Provide Rights for Victims of Crime: Hearings on H.J. Res. 173 & H.J. Res. 174 Before the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 104th Cong. 143 (1996) [hereinafter 1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings] (statement of Ellen Greenlee, President, National Legal Aid and Defender Association).

<sup>7</sup>A Proposed Constitutional Amendment to Establish a Bill of Rights for Crime Victims: Hearings on S.J. Res. 52 Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 104th Cong. 101 (1996) [hereinafter 1996 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings] (statement of Bruce Fein).

if these victims' pleas for recognition are legitimate, what does that say about how the system has treated them for so many years?

Others in this Symposium have touched on overarching questions presented by the victims' challenge to the structure of our criminal justice system. Professor Douglas Beloof's memorable paper persuasively demonstrates that a full appreciation of the rights of crime victims requires a "third model" that does not fit comfortably with the existing prosecution- and defendant-oriented paradigms generally used to understand the criminal process.<sup>8</sup> Indeed, as Professor William Pizzi's thought-provoking essay suggests, the very notion of victims having some role to play in the system is mind-boggling to professionals in the system who cannot even envision where a victim might sit in the courtroom.<sup>9</sup> Similar themes come to mind in reading Professor Susan Bandes's article, which skillfully describes the panoply of standing barriers that have been raised to prevent victims from obtaining admission to criminal proceedings.<sup>10</sup> Furthermore, Stephen Twist's insightful essay identifies the ways in which the system's zeal in protecting defense and prosecution interests has, in some ways, sown the seeds of its own destruction.<sup>11</sup>

My aim here is not to visit such intriguing general issues about victims in the criminal justice process, but rather to focus on how victims' rights would operate under one concrete proposal—the Victims' Rights Amendment. In particular, this Article analyzes the objections that the Amendment's opponents have raised. It should come as no great surprise that claims the Amendment simultaneously would "change basic principles that have been followed throughout American history," "lay waste to the criminal justice system," and—for good measure—"trivialize" the Constitution are not all true. This Article attempts to demonstrate that, in fact, none of these contradictory assertions is supported. A fair-minded look at the Amendment confirms that it will not "lay waste" to the system, but instead will build upon and improve it—retaining protection for the legitimate interests of prosecutors and defendants, while adding recognition of equally powerful interests of crime victims.

The objections to the Victims' Rights Amendment conveniently divide into three categories, which this Article analyzes in turn. Part I reviews normative objections to the Amendment—that is, objections to the desirability of the rights. The Part begins by reviewing the defendant-oriented objections leveled against a few of the rights,

---

<sup>8</sup>See Douglas Evan Beloof, The Third Model of Criminal Process: The Victim Participation Model, 1999 UTAH L. REV. 289 passim.

<sup>9</sup>See William T. Pizzi, Victims' Rights: Rethinking Our "Adversary System," 1999 UTAH L. REV. 349 passim.

<sup>10</sup>See Susan Bandes, Victim Standing, 1999 UTAH L. REV. ____.

<sup>11</sup>See Steven J. Twist, The Crime Victims' Rights Amendment and Two Good and Perfect Things, 1999 UTAH L. REV. 367 passim.

specifically the victim's right to be heard at sentencing, the victim's right to be present at trial, and the victim's right to a trial free from unreasonable delay. These objections lack merit. Part I concludes by refuting the prosecution-oriented objections to victims' rights, which revolve primarily around alleged excessive consumption of scarce criminal justice resources. These claims, however, are inconsistent with the available empirical evidence on the cost of victims' rights regimes in the states.

Next, Part II considers what might be styled as justification challenges—challenges that a victims' amendment is unjustified because victims already receive rights under the existing amalgam of state constitutional and statutory provisions. This claim of an "unnecessary" amendment, as advanced most prominently and capably in law review articles by Professor Robert Mosteller here and elsewhere,<sup>12</sup> misconceives the undeniable practical problems that victims face in attempting to secure their rights without federal constitutional protection.

Part III then turns to structural objections to the Amendment—claims that victims' rights are not properly constitutionalized, as advanced skillfully by Professor Henderson in this Symposium<sup>13</sup> and by others elsewhere. Contrary to this view, protection of the rights of citizens to participate in governmental processes is a subject long recognized as an appropriate one for a constitutional amendment. Moreover, constitutional protection for victims also can be crafted in ways that are sufficiently flexible to accommodate varying circumstances and varying criminal justice systems from state to state.

Finally, the Article concludes by examining the nature of the opposition to the Victims' Rights Amendment. Victims are not barbarians seeking to dismantle the pillars of wisdom from previous ages. Rather, they are citizens whose legitimate interests require recognition in any proper system of criminal justice. The Victims' Rights Amendment therefore deserves our full support.

I. NORMATIVE CHALLENGES

The most basic level at which the Victims' Rights Amendment could be disputed is the normative one: victims' rights are simply undesirable. Few of the objections to the Amendment, however, start from this premise. Instead, the vast bulk of the opponents flatly concede

---

<sup>12</sup>See, e.g., Robert P. Mosteller, The Unnecessary Victims' Rights Amendment, 1999 UTAH L. REV. 441 passim [hereinafter Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment]; see also Robert P. Mosteller, Victims' Rights and the United States Constitution: An Effort to Recast the Battle in Criminal Litigation, 85 GEO. L.J. 1691, 1692 (1997) [hereinafter Mosteller, Recasting the Battle].

<sup>13</sup>See Lynne Henderson, Revisiting Victim's Rights, 1999 UTAH L. REV. 381 passim.

the need for victim participation in the criminal justice system. For example, the senators on the Senate Judiciary Committee who dissented from supporting the Amendment<sup>14</sup> began by agreeing that “[t]he treatment of crime victims certainly is of central importance to a civilized society, and we must never simply ‘pass by on the other side.’”<sup>15</sup> Additionally, various law professors who sent a letter to Congress opposing the Amendment similarly begin by explaining that they “commend and share the desire to help crime victims” and that “[c]rime victims deserve protection.”<sup>16</sup> Further, Professor Mosteller agrees that “every sensible person can and should support victims of crime” and that the idea of “guarantee[ing] participatory rights to victims in judicial proceedings . . . is salutary.”<sup>17</sup>

The principal critics of the Amendment agree not only with the general sentiments of victims’ rights advocates but also with many of their specific policy proposals. Striking evidence of this agreement comes from the federal statute proposed by the dissenting senators, which would extend to victims in the federal system most of the same rights provided in the Amendment.<sup>18</sup> Other critics, too, have suggested protection for victims in statutory rather than constitutional terms.<sup>19</sup> In parsing through the relevant congressional hearings and academic literature, many of the important provisions of the Amendment appear to garner wide acceptance. Few disagree, for example, that victims of violent crime should receive notice that the offender has escaped from custody and should receive restitution from an offender. What is most striking, then, about debates over the Amendment is not the scattered points of disagreement, but rather the abundant points of agreement.<sup>20</sup> This harmony suggests that the Amendment satisfies a basic requirement for a constitutional amendment—that it reflect values widely shared throughout society. There is, to be sure, normative disagreement

---

<sup>14</sup>Unless otherwise specifically noted, I will refer to the minority views of Senators Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl as the “dissenting Senators,” although a few other Senators also offered their dissenting views.

<sup>15</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 50 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

<sup>16</sup>1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 140–41 (letter from various law professors).

<sup>17</sup>Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1692.

<sup>18</sup>See Crime Victims Assistance Act, S. 1081, 105th Cong., 1st Sess. (1997) (providing victims with enhanced rights in trial process); see also S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 77 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy and Kennedy) (defending this statutory protection of victims’ rights).

<sup>19</sup>See, e.g., 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 141 (letters from various law professors) (“Crime victims deserve protection, but this should be accomplished by statutes, not a constitutional amendment.”).

<sup>20</sup>See generally Twist, supra note 12, at 376 (noting frequency with which opponents of Amendment endorse its goals).

about some of the proposed provisions in the Amendment, disagreements analyzed below. But the natural tendency to focus on points of conflict should not obscure the substantial points of widespread agreement.

While there exists near consensus on the desirability of many of the values reflected in the Amendment, a few rights are disputed on grounds that can be conveniently divided into two groups. Some rights are challenged as unfairly harming defendants' interests in the process, others as harming interests of prosecutors. That the Amendment has drawn fire from some on both sides might suggest that it has things about right in the middle. Contrary to these criticisms, however, the Amendment does not harm the legitimate interests of either side.

A. Defendant-Oriented Challenges to Victims' Rights

Perhaps the most frequently repeated claim against the Amendment is that it would harm defendants' rights. Often this claim is made in general terms, relying on little more than the reflexive view that anything good for victims must be bad for defendants. But, as the general consensus favoring victims' rights suggests, rights for victims need not come at the expense of defendants. Strong supporters of defendants' rights agree. Professor Laurence Tribe, for example, has concluded that the proposed Amendment is "a carefully crafted measure, adding victims' rights that can coexist side by side with defendants'."<sup>21</sup> Similarly, Senator Joseph Biden reports: "I am now convinced that no potential conflict exists between the victims' rights enumerated in [the Amendment] and any existing constitutional right afforded to defendants . . . ."<sup>22</sup> A recent summary of the available research on the purported conflict of rights supports these views, finding that victims' rights do not harm defendants:

[S]tudies show that there "is virtually no evidence that the victims' participation is at the defendant's expense." For example, one study, with data from thirty-six states, found that victim-impact statutes resulted in only a negligible effect on sentence type and length. Moreover, judges interviewed in states with legislation granting rights to the crime victim indicated that the balance was not improperly tipped in favor of the victim. One article studying victim participation in plea bargaining found that such involvement helped victims "without any significant detrimental impact to the interests of prosecutors and defendants.” Another national study in states with victims’ reforms concluded that: “[v]ictim satisfaction with prosecutors and the criminal justice system was increased without infringing on the defendant’s rights.”<sup>23</sup>

---

<sup>21</sup>Laurence H. Tribe & Paul G. Cassell, Embed the Rights of Victims in the Constitution, L.A. TIMES, July 6, 1998, at B5. For a more detailed exposition of Professor Tribe's views, see 1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 7, at 238 (letter from Prof. Tribe).

<sup>22</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 82 (1998) (additional views of Sen. Biden).

Given these empirical findings, it should come as no surprise that claims that the Amendment would injure defendants rest on a predicted parade of horrors, not any real-world experience. Yet this experience suggests that the parade will never materialize, particularly given the redrafting of the proposed amendment to narrow some of the rights it extends.<sup>24</sup> A careful examination of the most-often-advanced claims of

---

<sup>23</sup>Chief Justice Richard Barajas & Scott A. Nelson, The Proposed Crime Victims’ Federal Constitutional Amendment: Working Toward a Proper Balance, 49 BAYLOR L. REV. 1, 18–19 (1987) (quoting Deborah P. Kelly, Have Victim Reforms Gone Too Far—or Not Far Enough?, 5 CRIM. JUST., Fall 1991, at 28, 28; Sarah N. Welling, Victim Participation in Plea Bargains, 65 WASH. U. L.Q. 301, 355 (1987)) (internal footnotes omitted).

<sup>24</sup>As originally proposed, the Amendment extended to victims a broad right “[t]o a final disposition of the proceedings relating to the crime free from unreasonable delay.” S.J. Res. 6, 105th Cong. § 1 (1997). It now provides victims a narrower right to “consideration of the interest of the victim that any trial be free from unreasonable delay.” S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999). This narrower formulation, limited to a “trial,” avoids the objection that an open-ended right to a speedy disposition could undercut a defendant’s post-trial, habeas corpus rights, particularly in capital cases. See, e.g., 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 155 (statement of Mark Kappelhof, ACLU Legislative Counsel) (stating that “right of habeas corpus is also threatened under [the Amendment]”).

As originally proposed, the Amendment also promised victims a broad right to “be reasonably protected from the accused.” S.J. Res. 6, 105th Cong. (1997). It now provides victims a right to have the “safety of the victim [considered] in determining [a] release from custody.” S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999). This narrower formulation was apparently designed, in part, to respond to the objection that the Amendment might be construed to hold offenders “beyond the maximum term or even indefinitely if they are found to pose a danger to their victims.” 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 155 (statement of Mark Kappelhof, ACLU Legislative Counsel).

Professor Mosteller has argued that these particular changes, and several others like them, were designed to move the Amendment away from providing aid to victims to instead provide nothing but a benefit to prosecutors. See Robert P. Mosteller, Victims’ Rights and the Constitution: Moving from Guaranteeing Participatory Rights to Benefiting the Prosecution, 29 ST. MARY’S L.J. 1053, 1058 (1998). This strikes me as a curious view, given that these changes specifically responded to concerns expressed by advocates of defendants’ rights, including Mosteller himself. See Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1707 n.58. More generally, it should be clear that the proposed Amendment is not predicated on the idea of providing benefits to conflict with defendants' legitimate interests reveals that any purported conflict is illusory.<sup>25</sup>

1. The Right to Be Heard

Some opponents of the Amendment object that the victim's right to be heard will interfere with a defendant's efforts to mount a defense. At least some of these objections refute straw men, not the arguments for the Amendment. For example, to prove that a victim's right to be heard is undesirable, objectors sometimes claim (as was done in the Senate Judiciary Committee minority report) that "[t]he proposed Amendment gives victims [a] constitutional right to be heard, if present, and to submit a statement at all stages of the criminal proceeding."<sup>26</sup> From this premise, the objectors then postulate that the Amendment would make it "much more difficult for judges to limit testimony by victims at trial" and elsewhere to the detriment of defendants.<sup>27</sup> This constitutes an almost breathtaking misapprehension of the scope of the rights at issue. Far from extending victims the right to be heard at "all" stages of a criminal case including the trial, the Amendment explicitly limits the right to public "proceedings to determine a conditional release from custody, an acceptance of a negotiated plea, or a sentence."<sup>28</sup> At these three kinds of hearings—bail, plea, and sentencing—victims have compelling reasons to be heard and can be heard without adversely affecting the defendant's rights.

Proof that victims can properly be heard at these points comes ~~from what appears to be a~~ substantial inconsistency by the dissenting prosecutors. Not only has the Amendment been attacked as harming prosecution interests, see infra notes 127–47 and accompanying text, but it does not attempt to achieve such a favorite goal of prosecutors as overturning the exclusionary rule. Cf. CAL. CONST. art. I, § 28 (victims' initiative restricting exclusion of evidence); OR. CONST. art. I, § 42 (same), invalidated, Armatta v. Kitzhaber, 959 P.2d 49, 64 (Or. 1998) (holding that initiative violated Oregon Constitution's single subject rule). See generally PRESIDENT'S TASK FORCE ON VICTIMS OF CRIME, FINAL REPORT 24–28 (1982) (urging abolition of exclusionary rule on victim-related grounds).

<sup>25</sup>Until the opponents of the Amendment can establish any conflict between defendants' rights under the Constitution and victims' rights under the Amendment, there is no need to address the subject of how courts should balance the rights in case of conflict. Cf. S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 22–23 (1998) (explaining reasons for rejecting balancing language in Amendment); A Proposed Constitutional Amendment to Protect Crime Victims: Hearings on S.J. Res. 44 Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 105th Cong. 45 (1998) [hereinafter 1998 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings] (statement of Prof. Paul Cassell), discussed in Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 462–63 (discussing how balancing language might be drafted if conflict were to be proven).

<sup>26</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 66 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl) (emphasis added).

<sup>27</sup>Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>28</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999).

senators. While criticizing the right to be heard in the Amendment, these senators simultaneously sponsored federal legislation to extend to victims in the federal system precisely the same rights.<sup>29</sup> They urged their colleagues to pass their statute in lieu of the Amendment because “our bill provides the very same rights to victims as the proposed constitutional amendment.”<sup>30</sup> In defending their bill, they saw no difficulty in giving victims a chance to be heard,<sup>31</sup> a right that already exists in many states.<sup>32</sup>

A much more careful critique of the victim’s right to be heard is found in a recent prominent article by Professor Susan Bandes.<sup>33</sup> Like most other opponents of the Amendment, she concentrates her intellectual fire on the victim’s right to be heard at sentencing, arguing that victim impact statements are inappropriate narratives to introduce in capital sentencing proceedings.<sup>34</sup> While rich in insights about the implications of “outsider narratives,” the article provides no general basis for objecting to a victim’s right to be heard at sentencing. Her criticism of victim impact statements is limited to capital cases, a tiny fraction of all criminal trials.<sup>35</sup>

---

<sup>29</sup>See S. 1081, 105th Cong. 1st Sess. § 101 (1997) (establishing right to be heard on issue of detention); id. § 121 (establishing right to be heard on merits of plea agreement); id. § 122 (establishing enhanced right of allocution at sentencing).

<sup>30</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 77 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy and Kennedy).

<sup>31</sup>See, e.g., 143 CONG. REC. S8275 (daily ed. July 29, 1997) (statement of Sen. Kennedy) (supporting statute expanding victims’ rights to participate in all phases of process); id. at S8269 (statement of Sen. Patrick Leahy) (supporting Crime Victims’ Assistance Act).

<sup>32</sup>See Paul G. Cassell, Balancing the Scales of Justice: The Case for and the Effects of Utah’s Victims’ Rights Amendment, 1994 UTAH L. REV. 1373, 1394–96 (collecting citations to states granting victims a right to be heard).

<sup>33</sup>See Susan Bandes, Empathy, Narrative, and Victim Impact Statements, 63 U. CHI. L. REV. 361, 364 (1996).

<sup>34</sup>See id. at 390–93.

<sup>35</sup>See id. at 392–93. In a recent conversation, Professor Bandes stated that though her article focused on the capital context, she did not intend to imply that victim impact statements ought to be admissible in noncapital cases. Indeed, based on the proponents’ argument that victim impact statements by relatives and friends are needed because the homicide victim is, by definition, unavailable, she believes such statements would seem even less defensible in nonhomicide cases. Personal Communication with Susan Bandes, Professor of Law, DePaul University (Dec. 14, 1998). This extension of her argument seems unconvincing, as the case for excluding victim statements is even weaker for noncapital cases. Not only are noncapital cases generally less fraught with emotion, but the sentence is typically imposed by a judge, who can sort out any improper aspects of victim statements. For this reason, even when victim impact testimony was denied in capital cases to juries, courts often concluded that judges could hear the same evidence. See Lightbourne v. Dugger, 829 F.2d 1012,

Professor Bandes's objection is important to consider carefully because it presents one of the most thoughtfully developed cases against victim impact statements.<sup>36</sup> Her case, however, is ultimately unpersuasive. She agrees that capital sentencing decisions ought to rest, at least in part, on the harm caused by murderers.<sup>37</sup> She explains that, in determining which murderers should receive the death penalty, society's "gaze ought to be carefully fixed on the harm they have caused and their moral culpability for that harm."<sup>38</sup> Bandes then contends that victim impact statements divert sentencers from that inquiry to "irrelevant fortuities" about the victims and their families.<sup>39</sup> But in moving on to this point, she apparently assumes that a judge or jury can comprehend the full harm caused by a murder without hearing testimony from the surviving family members. That assumption is simply unsupported. Any reader who disagrees with me should take a simple test. Read an actual victim impact statement from a homicide case all the way through and see if you truly learn nothing new about the enormity of the loss caused by a homicide. Sadly, the reader will have no shortage of such victim impact statements to choose from. Actual impact statements from court proceedings are accessible in various places.<sup>40</sup> Other examples can be found in moving accounts ~~written by family members who~~ have lost a loved one to a murder. A 1027 (11th Cir. 1987); State v. Beaty, 762 P.2d 519, 531 (Ariz. 1988); State v. Card, 825 P.2d 1081, 1089 (Idaho 1991); People v. Johnson, 594 N.E.2d 253, 270 (Ill. 1992); State v. Post, 513 N.E.2d 754, 759 (Ohio. 1987). It is also hazardous to generalize about such testimony given the vast range of varying circumstances presented by noncapital cases. See generally Stephen J. Schulhofer, The Trouble with Trials; the Trouble with Us, 105 YALE L.J. 825, 848–49 (1995) (noting differences between victim participation in capital and noncapital sentencings and concluding that "wholesale condemnation of victim participation under all circumstances is surely unwarranted").

<sup>36</sup>Several other articles have also focused on and carefully developed a case against victim impact statements. See, e.g., Donald J. Hall, Victims' Voices in Criminal Court: The Need for Restraint, 28 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 233, 235 (1991) (arguing that "the fundamental evil" associated with victim statements is "disparate sentencing of similarly situated defendants"); Lynne N. Henderson, The Wrongs of Victim's Rights, 37 STAN. L. REV. 937, 986–1006 (1985) (outlining why goals of criminal statements do not support victim participation in sentencing). Because Professor Bandes's article is the most current, I focus on it here as exemplary of the critics' position.

<sup>37</sup>See Bandes, supra note 34, at 398.

<sup>38</sup>Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>39</sup>Id.

<sup>40</sup>See, e.g., Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496, 509–15 (1987) (attaching impact statement to opinion); United States v. Nichols, No. 96-CR-68, 1997 WL 790551, at **1–47 (D. Colo. Dec. 29, 1997) (various victim impact statements at sentencing of Terry Nichols); United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68, 1997 WL 296395, at **1–53 (D. Colo. June 5, 1997) (various victim impact statements at sentencing of Timothy McVeigh); A Federal Judge Speaks Out for Victims, AM. LAWYER, Mar. 20, 1995, at 4 (statement by Federal Judge Michael Luttig at the sentencing of his father's murderers).

powerful example is the collection of statements from families devastated by the Oklahoma City bombing collected in Marsha Kight's affecting Forever Changed: Remembering Oklahoma City, April 19, 1995.<sup>41</sup> Kight's compelling book is not unique, as equally powerful accounts from the family of Ron Goldman,<sup>42</sup> children of Oklahoma City,<sup>43</sup> Alice Kaminsky,<sup>44</sup> George Lardner Jr.,<sup>45</sup> Dorris Porch and Rebecca Easley,<sup>46</sup> Mike Reynolds,<sup>47</sup> Deborah Spungen,<sup>48</sup> John Walsh,<sup>49</sup> and Marvin Weinstein<sup>50</sup> make all too painfully clear. Intimate third-party accounts offer similar insights about the generally unrecognized, yet far-ranging consequences of homicide.<sup>51</sup>

Professor Bandes acknowledges the power of hearing from victims' families. Indeed, in a commendable willingness to present victim statements with all their force, she begins her article by quoting from the victim impact statement at issue in Payne v. Tennessee,<sup>52</sup> a

---

<sup>41</sup>See MARSHA KIGHT, FOREVER CHANGED: REMEMBERING OKLAHOMA CITY, APRIL 19, 1995 (1998).

<sup>42</sup>See THE FAMILY OF RON GOLDMAN, HIS NAME IS RON: OUR SEARCH FOR JUSTICE (1997).

<sup>43</sup>See NANCY LAMB AND CHILDREN OF OKLAHOMA CITY, ONE APRIL MORNING: CHILDREN REMEMBER THE OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING (1996).

<sup>44</sup>See ALICE R. KAMINSKY, THE VICTIM'S SONG (1985).

<sup>45</sup>See GEORGE LARDNER JR., THE STALKING OF KRISTIN: A FATHER INVESTIGATES THE MURDER OF HIS DAUGHTER (1995).

<sup>46</sup>See DORRIS D. PORCH & REBECCA EASLEY, MURDER IN MEMPHIS: THE TRUE STORY OF A FAMILY'S QUEST FOR JUSTICE (1997).

<sup>47</sup>See MIKE REYNOLDS & BILL JONES, THREE STRIKES AND YOU'RE OUT . . . A PROMISE TO KIMBER: THE CHRONICLE OF AMERICA'S TOUGHEST ANTI-CRIME LAW (1996).

<sup>48</sup>See DEOBRAH SPUNGEN, AND I DON'T WANT TO LIVE THIS LIFE (1983).

<sup>49</sup>See JOHN WALSH, TEARS OF RAGE: FROM GRIEVING FATHER TO CRUSADER FOR JUSTICE: THE UNTOLD STORY OF THE ADAM WALSH CASE (1997). Professor Henderson describes Walsh as "preaching [a] gospel of rage and revenge." Henderson, supra note 14, at [18]. This seems to me to misunderstand Walsh's efforts, which Walsh has explained as making sure that his son Adam "didn't die in vain." WALSH, supra, at 305. Walsh's Herculean efforts to establish the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, see id. at 131-58, is a prime example of neither rage nor revenge, but rather a desirable public policy reform springing from a tragic crime.

<sup>50</sup>See MILTON J. SHAPIRO WITH MARVIN WEINSTEIN, WHO WILL CRY FOR STACI? THE TRUE STORY OF A GRIEVING FATHER'S QUEST FOR JUSTICE (1995).

<sup>51</sup>See, e.g., GARY KINDER, VICTIM 41-45 (1982); JANICE HARRIS LORD, NO TIME FOR GOODBYES: COPING WITH SORROW, ANGER AND INJUSTICE AFTER A TRAGIC DEATH xii (4th ed. 1991); SHELLEY NEIDERBACH, INVISIBLE WOUNDS: CRIME VICTIMS SPEAK 19 (1986); DEBORAH SPUNGEN, HOMICIDE: THE HIDDEN VICTIMS xix-xxiii (1998); JOSEPH WAMBAUGH, THE ONION FIELD 169-71 (1973).

<sup>52</sup>501 U.S. 808 (1991).

statement from Mary Zvolanek about her daughter's and granddaughter's deaths and their effect on her three-year-old grandson:

He cries for his mom. He doesn't seem to understand why she doesn't come home. And he cries for his sister Lacie. He comes to me many times during the week and asks me, Grandmama, do you miss my Lacie. And I tell him yes. He says, I'm worried about my Lacie.<sup>53</sup>

Bandes quite accurately observes that the statement is "heartbreaking" and "[o]n paper, it is nearly unbearable to read."<sup>54</sup> She goes on to argue that such statements are "prejudicial and inflammatory" and "overwhelm the jury with feelings of outrage."<sup>55</sup> In my judgment, Bandes fails here to distinguish sufficiently between prejudice and unfair prejudice from a victim's statement. It is a commonplace of evidence law that a litigant is not entitled to exclude harmful evidence, but only unfairly harmful evidence.<sup>56</sup> Bandes appears to believe that a sentence imposed following a victim impact statement rests on unjustified prejudice; alternatively, one might conclude simply that the sentence rests on a fuller understanding of all of the murder's harmful ramifications. Why is it "heartbreaking" and "nearly unbearable to read" about what it is like for a three-year-old to witness the murder of his mother and his two-year-old sister? The answer, judging from why my heart broke as I read the passage, is that we can no longer treat the crime as some abstract event. In other words, we begin to realize the nearly unbearable heartbreak—that is, the actual and total harm—that the murderer inflicted.<sup>57</sup> Such a realization undoubtedly will hamper a defendant's efforts to escape a capital sentence. But given that loss is a proper consideration for the jury, the statement is not unfairly detrimental to the defendant. Indeed, to conceal such evidence from the jury may leave them with a distorted, minimized view of the impact of the crime.<sup>58</sup> Victim impact statements are thus easily justified because

---

<sup>53</sup>Bandes, supra note 34, at 361 (quoting Payne, 501 U.S. at 814–15).

<sup>54</sup>Id. at 361.

<sup>55</sup>Id. at 401.

<sup>56</sup>See CHRISTOPHER B. MUELLER & LAIRD C. KIRKPATRICK, EVIDENCE § 4.10, at 194 (2d ed. 1999).

<sup>57</sup>Cf. Edna Erez, Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Victim? Victim Impact Statements as Victim Empowerment and Enhancement of Justice, CRIM. L. REV. (forthcoming 1999) ("[L]egal professionals [in South Australia] who have been exposed to [victim impact statements] have commented on how uninformed they were about the extent, variety and longevity of various victimizations, how much they have learned . . . about the impact of crime on victims . . .").

<sup>58</sup>See Brooks Douglass, Oklahoma's Victim Impact Legislation: A New Voice for Victims and Their Families: A Response to Professor Coyne, 46 OKLA. L. REV. 283, 289 (1993) (offering example of jury denied truth about full impact of a crime).

they provide the jury with a full picture of the murder's consequences.<sup>59</sup>

Bandes also contends that impact statements "may completely block" the ability of the jury to consider mitigation evidence.<sup>60</sup> It is hard to assess this essentially empirical assertion, because Bandes does not present direct empirical support.<sup>61</sup> Clearly many juries decline to return death sentences even when presented with powerful victim impact testimony, with Terry Nichols's life sentence for conspiring to set the Oklahoma City bomb a prominent example. Indeed, one recent empirical study of decisions from jurors who actually served in capital cases found that facts about adult victims "made little difference" in death penalty decisions.<sup>62</sup> A case might be crafted from the available <sup>59</sup>In addition to allowing assessment of the harm of the crime, victim impact statements are also justified because they provide "a quick glimpse of the life which a defendant chose to extinguish." Payne, 501 U.S. at 822 (internal quotation omitted). In the interests of brevity, I will not develop such an argument here, nor will I address the more complicated issues surrounding whether a victim's family members may offer opinions about the appropriate sentence for a defendant. See id. at 830 n.2 (reserving this issue); S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 28-29 (1998) (indicating that Amendment does not alter laws precluding victim opinion as to proper sentence).

---

<sup>60</sup>Bandes, supra note 34, at 402.

<sup>61</sup>The only empirical evidence Bandes discusses concerns the alleged race-of-the-victim effect found in the Baldus study of Georgia capital cases in the 1980s. See id. This study, however, sheds no direct light on the effect of victim impact statements on capital sentencing, as victim impact evidence apparently was not, and indeed could not have been at that time, one of the control variables. See GA. CODE ANN. §§ 17-10-1.1 to -1.2 (1986) (barring victim impact testimony). Had victim impact evidence been one of the variables, it seems likely that any race-of-the-victim effect would have been reduced by giving the jurors actual information about the uniqueness and importance of the life taken, thereby eliminating the jurors' need to rely on stereotypic, and potentially race-based, assumptions. In any event, there is no need to ponder such possibilities at length here because the race-of-the-victim "effect" disappeared when important control variables were added to the regression equations. See McCleskey v. Zant, 580 F. Supp. 338, 366 (D. Ga. 1984) (concluding that "there is no support for a proposition that race has any effect in any single case"), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 753 F.2d 877 (11th Cir. 1986), aff'd, 481 U.S. 279 (1987).

<sup>62</sup>Stephen P. Garvey, Aggravation and Mitigation in Capital Cases: What Do Jurors Think?, 98 COLUM. L. REV. 1538, 1556 (1998). The study concluded that jurors would be more likely to impose death if the victim was a child, and that "extreme caution" was warranted in interpreting its findings. Id. It should be noted that the study data came from cases between roughly 1986 and 1993, when victim impact statements were not generally used. See id. at 1554. However, it is possible that a victim impact statement may have been introduced in a few of the cases in the data set after the 1991 Payne decision. Electronic Mail from Stephen P. Garvey, Professor, Cornell Law School, to Prof. Paul G. Cassell (Feb. 11, 1999) (on file with author).

Garvey's methodology of surveying real juries about real cases seems preferable national data that Supreme Court decisions on victim impact testimony did, at the margin, alter some cases. It is arguable that the number of death sentences imposed in this country fell after the Supreme Court prohibited use of victim impact statements in 1987<sup>63</sup> and then rose when the Court reversed itself a few years later.<sup>64</sup> As discussed in greater length in Appendix B,<sup>65</sup> however, this conclusion is far from clear and, in any event, the effect on likelihood of a death sentence would be, at most, marginal.

The empirical evidence in noncapital cases also finds little effect on sentence severity. For example, a study in California found that “[t]he right to allocution at sentencing has had little net effect . . . on sentences in general.”<sup>66</sup> A study in New York similarly reported “no support for those who argue against [victim impact] statements on the grounds that to relying on mock jury research, which suggests that victim impact statements may affect jurors’ views about capital sentencing. See Edith Greene, The Many Guises of Victim Impact Evidence and Effects on Jurors’ Judgments, PSYCHOL., CRIME & L. (forthcoming 1999) (discussing mock jury research); Edith Greene & Heather Koehring, Victim Impact Evidence in Capital Cases: Does the Victim’s Character Matter?, 28 J. APPLIED SOC. PSYCHOL. 145, 154 (1998) (finding support for hypothesis that victim impact evidence would affect jurors’ capital sentencing decisions); James Luginbuhl & Michael Burkhead, Victim Impact Evidence in Capital Trial: Encouraging Votes for Death, 20 AM. J. CRIM. JUST. 1, 9 (1995) (finding support for hypothesis that victim impact evidence would increase jurors’ votes for death penalty). But cf. Ronald Mazzella & Alan Feingold, The Effects of Physical Attractiveness, Race, Socioeconomic Status, and Gender of Defendants and Victims on Judgments of Mock Jurors: A Meta-Analysis, 1994 J. APPLIED SOC. PSYCHOL. 1315, 1319–30 (1994) (finding, through meta-analysis of previous research, that effects of victim characteristics on juror’s judgments were generally inconsequential). Whether mock jury simulations capture real-world effects is open to question generally. See Paul G. Cassell, The Guilty and the “Innocent”: An Examination of Alleged Cases of Wrongful Conviction from False Confessions, 22 HARV. J.L. & PUB. POL’Y 523, 600 (1999) (collecting evidence on this point); see also Free v. Peters, 12 F.3d 700, 705–06 (7th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (finding that there is little “a priori reason” to think that results of examination setting offer insight to abilities of real juries who spend days and weeks becoming familiar with case). The concerns about the realism of mock jury research apply with particular force to emotionally charged death penalty verdicts. See Mark Costanzo & Sally Costanzo, Jury Decision Making in the Capital Penalty Phase, 16 LAW & HUM. BEHAV. 185, 191 (1992) (“[T]he very nature of the [death] penalty decision may render it an inappropriate topic for jury simulation studies.”).

---

<sup>63</sup>See Booth, 482 U.S. at 509 (concluding that introduction of impact statement in sentencing phase of capital murder violates Eighth Amendment).

<sup>64</sup>See Payne, 501 U.S. at 830 (overruling Booth).

<sup>65</sup>See infra Appendix B.

<sup>66</sup>NAT’L INST. OF JUSTICE, U.S. DEP’T OF JUSTICE, EXECUTIVE SUMMARY, VICTIM APPEARANCES AT SENTENCING HEARINGS UNDER THE CALIFORNIA VICTIMS’ BILL OF RIGHTS 61 (1987) [hereinafter NIJ SENTENCING STUDY].

their use places defendants in jeopardy.”<sup>67</sup> A careful scholar recently reviewed comprehensively all of the available evidence in this country and elsewhere, and concluded that “sentence severity has not increased following the passage of [victim impact] legislation.”<sup>68</sup> It is thus unclear why we should credit Bandes’s assertion that victim impact statements seriously hamper the defense of capital defendants.

Even if such an impact on capital sentences were proven, it would be susceptible to the reasonable interpretation that victim testimony did not “block” jury understanding, but rather presented enhanced information about the full horror of the murder or put in context mitigating evidence of the defendant. Professor David Friedman has suggested this conclusion, observing that “[i]f the legal rules present the defendant as a living, breathing human being with loving parents weeping on the witness stand, while presenting the victim as a shadowy abstraction, the result will be to overstate, in the minds of the jury, the cost of capital punishment relative to the benefit.”<sup>69</sup> Correcting this misimpression is not distorting the decision-making process, but

---

<sup>67</sup>Robert C. Davis & Barbara E. Smith, The Effects of Victim Impact Statements on Sentencing Decisions: A Test in an Urban Setting, 11 JUST. QUART. 453, 466 (1994); accord ROBERT C. DAVIS ET AL., VICTIM IMPACT STATEMENTS: THEIR EFFECTS ON COURT OUTCOMES AND VICTIM SATISFACTION 68 (1990) (concluding that result of study “lend[s] support to advocates of victim impact statements” since no evidence indicates that these statements “put[] defendants in jeopardy [or] result in harsher sentences”).

<sup>68</sup>Erez, supra note 58, at 5; accord Edna Erez, Victim Participation in Sentencing: And the Debate Goes On . . ., 3 INT’L REV. OF VICTIMOLOGY 17, 22 (1994) [hereinafter Erez, Victim Participation] (“Research on the impact of victims’ input on sentencing outcome is inconclusive. At best it suggests that victim input has only a limited effect.”). For further discussion of the effect of victim impact statements, see, for example, Edna Erez & Pamela Tontodonato, The Effect of Victim Participation in Sentencing on Sentence Outcome, 28 CRIMINOLOGY 451, 467 (1990); SUSAN W. HILLENBRAND & BARBARA E. SMITH, VICTIMS RIGHTS LEGISLATION: AN ASSESSMENT OF ITS IMPACT ON CRIMINAL JUSTICE PRACTITIONERS AND VICTIMS, A STUDY OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION’S CRIMINAL JUSTICE SECTION VICTIM WITNESS PROJECT 159 (1989). See also Edna Erez & Leigh Roeger, The Effect of Victim Impact Statements on Sentencing Patterns and Outcomes: The Australian Experience, 23 J. CRIM. JUSTICE 363, 375 (1995) (Australian study finding no support for claim that impact statements increase sentence severity); R. Douglas et al., Victims of Efficiency: Tracking Victim Information Through the System in Victoria, Australia, 3 INT’L REV. VICTIMOLOGY 95, 103 (1994) (concluding that greater information about nature of victimization makes little difference in sentencing); Edna Erez & Linda Rogers, Victim Impact Statements and Sentencing Outcomes and Processes: The Perspectives of Legal Professionals, 39 BRIT. J. CRIMINOLOGY 216, 234–35 (1999) (same).

<sup>69</sup>David D. Friedman, Should the Characteristics of Victims and Criminals Count?: Payne v. Tennessee and Two Views of Efficient Punishment, 34 B.C. L. REV. 731, 749 (1993).

eliminating a distortion that would otherwise occur.<sup>70</sup> This interpretation meshes with empirical studies in noncapital cases suggesting that, if a victim impact statement makes a difference in punishment, the description of the harm sustained by the victims is the crucial factor.<sup>71</sup> The studies thus indicate that the general tendency of victim impact evidence is to enhance sentence accuracy and proportionality rather than increase sentence punitiveness.<sup>72</sup>

Finally, Bandes and other critics argue that victim impact statements result in unequal justice.<sup>73</sup> Justice Powell made this claim in his since-overturned decision in Booth v. Maryland, arguing that “in some cases the victim will not leave behind a family, or the family members may be less articulate in describing their feelings even though their sense of loss is equally severe.”<sup>74</sup> This kind of difference, however, is hardly unique to victim impact evidence.<sup>75</sup> To provide one obvious example, current rulings from the Court invite defense mitigation evidence from a defendant’s family and friends, despite the fact that some defendants may have more or less articulate acquaintances. In Payne, for example, the defendant’s parents testified that he was “a good son” and his girlfriend testified that he “was affectionate, caring, and kind to her children.”<sup>76</sup> In another case, a defendant introduced evidence of having won a dance choreography award while in prison.<sup>77</sup> Surely this kind of testimony, no less than victim impact statements, can vary in persuasiveness in ways not directly connected to <sup>70</sup>See id. at 750 (reasoning that Payne rule “can be interpreted . . . as a way of reminding the jury that victims, like criminals, are human beings with parents and children, lives that matter to themselves and others”).

---

<sup>71</sup>See Erez & Tontodonato, supra note 69, at 469.

<sup>72</sup>See Erez, Perspectives of Legal Professionals, supra note 69, at 235 (discussing South Australian study); Edna Erez, Victim Participation in Sentencing: Rhetoric and Reality, 18 J. CRIM. JUSTICE 19, 29 (1990).

<sup>73</sup>See, e.g., Bandes, supra note 34, at 408 (arguing that victim impact statements play on our pre-conscious prejudices and stereotypes).

<sup>74</sup>Booth, 482 U.S. at 505, overruled in Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 830 (1991).

<sup>75</sup>See Paul Gewirtz, Victims and Voyeurs at the Criminal Trial, 90 NW. U. L. REV. 863, 882 (1996) (“If courts were to exclude categories of testimony simply because some witnesses are less articulate than others, no category of oral testimony would be admissible.”).

<sup>76</sup>Payne, 501 U.S. at 826.

<sup>77</sup>See Boyde v. California, 494 U.S. 370, 382 n.5 (1990). See generally Susan N. Cornille, Comment, Retribution’s “Harm” Component and the Victim Impact Statement: Finding a Workable Model, 18 U. DAYTON L. REV. 389, 416–17 (1993) (discussing Boyde).

a defendant's culpability;<sup>78</sup> yet, it is routinely allowed. One obvious reason is that if varying persuasiveness were grounds for an inequality attack, then it is hard to see how the criminal justice system could survive at all. Justice White's powerful dissenting argument in Booth went unanswered, and remains unanswerable: "No two prosecutors have exactly the same ability to present their arguments to the jury; no two witnesses have exactly the same ability to communicate the facts; but there is no requirement . . . [that] the evidence and argument be reduced to the lowest common denominator."<sup>79</sup>

Given that our current system allows almost unlimited mitigation evidence on the part of the defendant, an argument for equal justice requires, if anything, that victim statements be allowed. Equality demands fairness not only between cases, but also within cases.<sup>80</sup> Victims and the public generally perceive great unfairness in a sentencing system with "one side muted."<sup>81</sup> The Tennessee Supreme Court stated the point bluntly in its decision in Payne, explaining that "[i]t is an affront to the civilized members of the human race to say that at sentencing in a capital case, a parade of witnesses may praise the background, character and good deeds of Defendant . . . without limitation as to relevancy, but nothing may be said that bears upon the character of, or the harm imposed, upon the victims."<sup>82</sup> With simplicity but haunting eloquence, a father whose ten-year-old daughter, Staci, was murdered, made the same point.<sup>83</sup> Before the sentencing phase began, Marvin Weinstein asked the prosecutor for the opportunity to speak to the jury because the defendant's mother would have the chance to do so.<sup>84</sup> The prosecutor replied that Florida law did not permit this.<sup>85</sup> Here was Weinstein's response to the prosecutor:

What? I'm not getting a chance to talk to the jury? He's not a defendant anymore. He's a murderer! A convicted murderer! The jury's made its decision. . . . His mother's had her chance all through the trial to sit

---

<sup>78</sup>Cf. Walton v. Arizona, 497 U.S. 639, 674 (1990) (Scalia, J., concurring) (criticizing decisions allowing such varying mitigating evidence on equality grounds).

<sup>79</sup>Booth, 482 U.S. at 518 (White, J., dissenting).

<sup>80</sup>See Gewirtz, supra note 76, at 880–82 (developing this position); see also Beloof, supra note 9, at 291 (noting that this value is part of third model of criminal justice); PRESIDENT'S TASK FORCE ON VICTIMS OF CRIME, FINAL REPORT 16 (1982) (for laws to be respected, they must be just—not only to accused, but to victims as well).

<sup>81</sup>Booth, 482 U.S. at 520 (Scalia, J., dissenting); accord PRESIDENT'S TASK FORCE ON VICTIMS OF CRIME, FINAL REPORT 77 (1982); Gewirtz, supra note 76, at 825–26.

<sup>82</sup>Tennessee v. Payne, 791 S.W.2d 10, 19 (1990), aff'd, 501 U.S. 808 (1991).

<sup>83</sup>See SHAPIRO, supra note 51, at 215.

<sup>84</sup>See id. at 215–16.

<sup>85</sup>See id.

there and let the jury see her cry for him while I was barred.<sup>86</sup> . . . Now she's getting another chance? Now she's going to sit there in that witness chair and cry for her son, that murderer, that murderer who killed my little girl!
Who will cry for Staci? Tell me that, who will cry for Staci?<sup>87</sup>

There is no good answer to this question,<sup>88</sup> a fact that has led to a change in the law in Florida and, indeed, all around the country. Today the laws of the overwhelming majority of states admit victim impact statements in capital and other cases.<sup>89</sup> These prevailing views lend strong support to the conclusion that equal justice demands the inclusion of victim impact statements, not their exclusion.

These arguments sufficiently dispose of the critics' main contentions.<sup>90</sup> Nonetheless, it is important to underscore that the critics

---

<sup>86</sup>Weinstein was subpoenaed by the defense as a witness and therefore required to sit outside the courtroom. See id. at 215–16.

<sup>87</sup>Id. at 319–20.

<sup>88</sup>A narrow, incomplete answer might be that neither the defendant's mother nor the victim's father should be permitted to cry in front of the jury. But assuming an instruction from the judge not to cry, the question would still remain why the defendant's mother could testify, but not the victim's father.

<sup>89</sup>See, e.g., ARIZ. REV. STAT. §§ 13-4410(C), -4424, -4426 (1989); MD. CODE art. 41, § 4-609(d) (1993); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:11-3c(6) (1995); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-3-207(2) (1998). See generally Payne, 501 U.S. at 821 (finding that Congress and most states allow victim impact statements); State v. Muhammad, 678 A.2d 164, 177–78 (N.J. 1996) (collecting state cases upholding victim impact evidence in capital cases). These laws answer Bandes's brief allusion to the principle of nulla poena sine lege (the requirement of prior notice that particular conduct is criminal). See Bandes, supra note 34, at 396 n.177. Because murderers are now plainly on notice that impact testimony will be considered at sentencing, the principle is not violated. Murderers can also fully foresee the possibility of victim impact testimony. Murder is always committed against "a 'unique' individual, and harm to some group of survivors is a consequence of a successful homicidal act so foreseeable as to be virtually inevitable." Payne, 501 U.S. at 838 (Souter, J., concurring). Moreover, it is unclear the extent to which nulla poena sine lege is designed to regulate sentencing decisions. The principle is one that "condemns judicial crime creation," Bynum v. State, 767 S.W.2d 769, 773 n.5 (Tex. Crim. App. 1989), but not the crafting of appropriate penalties for a previously defined crime like capital murder.

<sup>90</sup>Professor Bandes and others also have suggested that the admission of victim impact statements would lead to offensive mini-trials on the victim's character. See, e.g., Bandes, supra note 34, at 407–08. However, a recent survey of the empirical literature concludes that "[c]oncern that defendants would challenge the content of [victim impact statements] thereby subjecting victims to unpleasant cross examination on their statements has also not materialized." Erez, supra note 58, at 6. In neither the McVeigh trial nor the Nichols trial, for example, did aggressive defense attorneys generally fail to grapple with one of the strongest justifications for admitting victim impact statements: avoiding additional trauma to the victim. For all the fairness reasons just explained, gross disparity between defendants' and victims' rights to allocute at sentencing creates the risk of serious psychological injury to the victim.<sup>91</sup> As Professor Douglas Beloof has nicely explained, a justice system that fails to recognize a victim's right to participate threatens "secondary harm"—that is, harm inflicted by the operation of government processes beyond that already caused by the perpetrator.<sup>92</sup> This trauma stems from the fact that the victim perceives that the "system's resources are almost entirely devoted to the criminal, and little remains for those who have sustained harm at the criminal's hands."<sup>93</sup> As two noted experts on the psychological effects of crime have concluded, failure to offer victims a chance to participate in criminal proceedings can "result in increased feelings of inequity on the part of the victims, with a corresponding increase in crime-related psychological harm."<sup>94</sup> cross-examine the victims at any length about the impact of the crime.

<sup>91</sup>For general discussion of the harms caused by disparate treatment, see LINDA E. LEDRAY, RECOVERING FROM RAPE 125 (2d ed. 1994) (noting that it is important in healing process for rape victims to take back control from rapist and to focus their anger towards him); LEE MADIGAN & NANCY C. GAMBLE, THE SECOND RAPE: SOCIETY'S CONTINUED BETRAYAL OF THE VICTIM 97 (1989) (noting that during arraignment, survivors "first realized that it was not their trial, [and] that the attacker's rights were the ones being protected."); Beloof, supra note 9, at 294–96 (explaining that victims are exposed to two types of harms: the first from crime itself, and the second, from criminal process); Deborah P. Kelly, Victims, 34 WAYNE L. REV. 69, 72 (1987) (noting that "victims want[] more than pity and politeness; they want[] to participate"); Marlene A. Young, A Constitutional Amendment for Victims of Crime: The Victims' Perspective, 34 WAYNE L. REV. 51, 58 (1987) (discussing ways in which victims feel aggrieved from unequal treatment).

<sup>92</sup>See generally SPUNGEN, supra note 52, at 10 (explaining concept of secondary victimization); DOUGLAS E. BELOOF, Constitutional Civil Rights of Crime Victim Participation: The Emergence of Secondary Harm as a Rational Principle, in VICTIMS IN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE 10–18 (1999) (explaining concept of secondary harm);.

<sup>93</sup>Task Force on the Victims of Crime and Violence, Executive Summary: Final Report of the APA Task Force on the Victims of Crime and Violence, 40 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 107, 109 (1985).

<sup>94</sup>Dean G. Kilpatrick & Randy K. Otto, Constitutionally Guaranteed Participation in Criminal Proceedings for Victims: Potential Effects on Psychological Functioning, 34 WAYNE L. REV. 7, 21 (1987) (collecting evidence on this point); see also Ken Eikenberry, The Elevation of Victims' Rights in Washington State: Constitutional Status, 17 PEPP. L. REV. 19, 26–32 (1989) (studying positive impacts of Washington's victims' rights constitutional amendment); Erez, supra note 58, at 8–10 ("The cumulative knowledge acquired from research in various jurisdictions . . . suggests that victims often benefit from participation and input."); Jason N. Swensen, Survivor Says Measure Would Dignify Victims, THE DESERET NEWS (Salt Lake City), Oct. 21, 1994, at B4 (noting anguish widow suffered when denied chance to speak at sentencing of husband's murderer).

On the other hand, there is mounting evidence that “having a voice may improve victims’ mental condition and welfare.”<sup>95</sup> For some victims, making a statement helps restore balance between themselves and the offenders.<sup>96</sup> Others may consider it part of a just process or may want “to communicate the impact of the offense to the offender.”<sup>97</sup> This multiplicity of reasons explains why victims and surviving family members want so desperately to participate in sentencing hearings, even though their participation may not necessarily change the outcome.<sup>98</sup>

The possibility of the sentencing process aggravating the grievous injuries suffered by victims and their families is generally ignored by the Amendment’s opponents. But this possibility should give us great pause before we structure our criminal justice system to add the government’s insult to criminally inflicted injury. For this reason alone, victims and their families, no less than defendants, should be given the opportunity to be heard at sentencing.

2. The Right to Be Present at Trial

The allegation that the Amendment will impair defendants’ rights is most frequently advanced in connection with the victim’s right to be present at trial.<sup>99</sup> The most detailed and careful explication of the argument is Professor Mosteller’s, advanced in this Symposium and elsewhere<sup>100</sup> and recently relied upon by the dissenting senators of the Judiciary Committee.<sup>101</sup> In brief, Mosteller believes that fairness to defendants requires that victims be excluded from the courtroom, at least in some circumstances, to avoid the possibility that they might tailor their testimony to that given by other witnesses.<sup>102</sup> While I admire

---

<sup>95</sup>Erez, supra note 58, at 10.

<sup>96</sup>See id.

<sup>97</sup>Id. at 10; see also S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 17 (1998) (finding that victims’ statements have important “cathartic” effects).

<sup>98</sup>See Erez, supra note 58, at 10 (“[T]he majority of victims of personal felonies wished to participate and provide input, even when they thought their input was ignored or did not affect the outcome of their case. Victims have multiple motives for providing input, and having a voice serves several functions for them . . . .”) (internal footnote omitted).

<sup>99</sup>Technically, the right is “not to be excluded.” See infra notes 136–39 and accompanying text (explaining reason for this formulation).

<sup>100</sup>See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 455–67; see also Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1698–1704.

<sup>101</sup>See S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 66 & n.44 (1998) (citing Mosteller).

<sup>102</sup>See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 463 (finding that in specific situations, defendant’s “due process right to a fair trial may require exclusion of [victim-] witnesses”).

the clarity and doggedness with which Mosteller has set forth his position, I respectfully disagree with his conclusions for reasons to be articulated at length elsewhere.<sup>103</sup> Here it is only necessary to note that even this strong opponent of the Amendment finds himself agreeing with the value underlying the victim's right. He writes: "Many victims have a special interest in witnessing public proceedings involving criminal cases that directly touched their lives."<sup>104</sup> This view is widely shared. For instance, the Supreme Court has explained that "[t]he victim of the crime, the family of the victim, [and] others who have suffered similarly . . . have an interest in observing the course of a prosecution."<sup>105</sup> Victim concern about the prosecution stems from the fact that society has withdrawn "both from the victim and the vigilante the enforcement of criminal laws, but [it] cannot erase from people's consciousness the fundamental, natural yearning to see justice done—or even the urge for retribution."<sup>106</sup>

Professor Mosteller also seems to suggest that defendants currently have no constitutional right to exclude victims from trials, meaning that his argument rests purely on policy.<sup>107</sup> Mosteller's policy claim is not the general one that most victims ought to be excluded, but rather the much narrower one that "victims' rights to attend . . . proceedings should be guaranteed unless their presence threatens accuracy and fairness in adjudicating the guilt or innocence of the defendant."<sup>108</sup> On close examination, it turns out that, in Mosteller's view, victims' attendance threatens the accuracy of proceedings not in a typical criminal case, but only in the atypical case of a crime with multiple victims who are all eyewitness to the same event and who thus might

---

<sup>103</sup>See Paul G. Cassell & Douglas E. Beloof, The Victim's Right to Attend the Trial 10–18 (1999) (working manuscript, on file with author) (responding to Mosteller's view that victim's presence in courtroom infringes on defendant's rights).

<sup>104</sup>Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1699.

<sup>105</sup>Gannett Co. v. DePasquale, 443 U.S. 368, 428 (1979) (Blackmun, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

<sup>106</sup>Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 571 (1980) (plurality opinion); see also Pizzi, supra note 10, at [4] (noting importance of victim's right to attend trials).

<sup>107</sup>See Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1701 n.29 ("I question whether the practice [permitting multiple victim-eyewitnesses to remain in the courtroom and hear the testimony of others] would violate a defendant's constitutional rights, although I acknowledge that the result is not entirely free from doubt."). In his article in this Symposium, Professor Mosteller has amplified his view somewhat, taking the position that "in extreme factual situations" a defendant will have a constitutional right to exclude witnesses. See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 463. His position, however, seems to rest largely on policy grounds.

<sup>108</sup>Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1699; see also Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 447–48 (finding that "the most important reason" that victims' rights are not fully enforced is lack of resources and personnel).

tailor their testimony if allowed to observe the trial together.<sup>109</sup> This is a rare circumstance indeed, and it is hard to see the alleged disadvantage in this unusual circumstance outweighing the more pervasive advantages to victims in the run-of-the-mine cases.<sup>110</sup> Moreover, even in rare circumstances of multiple victims, other means exist for dealing with the tailoring issue. For example, the victims typically have given pretrial statements to police, grand juries, prosecutors, or defense investigators that would eliminate their ability to change their stories effectively.<sup>111</sup> In addition, the defense attorney may argue to the jury that victims have tailored their testimony even when they have not<sup>112</sup>—a fact that leads some critics of the Amendment to conclude that this provision will, if anything, help defendants rather than harm them. The dissenting Senators, for example, make precisely this helps-the-defendant argument,<sup>113</sup> although at another point they present the contrary harms-the-defendant claim.<sup>114</sup> In short, the critics have not articulated a strong case against the victim's right to be present.

3. The Right to Consideration of the Victim's Interest in a Trial Free from Unreasonable Delay

Opponents of the Amendment sometimes argue that giving victims a right to "consideration" of their interest "that any trial be free from unreasonable delay"<sup>115</sup> would impinge on a defendant's right to prepare an adequate defense. For example, the dissenting senators in the

---

<sup>109</sup>See Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1700 (arguing that, in cases of multiple victims, "a substantial danger exists" that victim-witnesses will be influenced during testimony of others); Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 463 (similar argument).

<sup>110</sup>See Erez, Victim Participation, supra note 69, at 29 (criticizing tendency of lawyers "to use an atypical or extreme case to make their point" and calling for public policy in the victims area to be based on more typical cases); cf. Robert P. Mosteller, Book Review, Popular Justice, 109 HARV. L. REV. 487, 487 (1995) (critiquing George P. Fletcher's book, WITH JUSTICE FOR SOME: VICTIMS' RIGHTS IN CRIMINAL TRIALS (1995), for "ignor[ing] how the criminal justice system operates in ordinary" cases).

<sup>111</sup>See Cassell, supra note 104 (explaining how prior statements would make it difficult for victim to change story).

<sup>112</sup>See S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 82 (1998) (additional views of Sen. Biden).

<sup>113</sup>See id. at 61 (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl) ("[T]here is also the danger that the victim's presence in the courtroom during the presentation of other evidence will cast doubt on her credibility as a witness . . . . Whole cases . . . may be lost in this way.").

<sup>114</sup>See id. at 65 (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl) ("Accuracy and fairness concerns may arise . . . where the victim is a fact witness whose testimony may be influenced by the testimony of others.").

<sup>115</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999).

Judiciary Committee claimed that “the defendant’s need for more time could be outweighed by the victim’s assertion of his right to have the matter expedited, seriously compromising the defendant’s right to effective assistance of counsel and his ability to receive a fair trial.”<sup>116</sup> Similarly, Professor Mosteller advances the claim here that this right “also affect[s] substantial interests of the defendant and may even alter the outcomes of cases.”<sup>117</sup>

These arguments fail to consider the precise scope of the victim’s right in question. The right the Amendment confers is one to “consideration of the interest of the victim that any trial be free from unreasonable delay.”<sup>118</sup> The opponents never seriously grapple with the fact that, by definition, all of the examples that they give of defendants legitimately needing more time to prepare would constitute reasons for “reasonable” delay. Indeed, it is interesting to note similar language in the American Bar Association’s directions to defense attorneys to avoid “unnecessary delay” that might harm victims.<sup>119</sup> The victim’s right, moreover, is to “consideration” of the victim’s interests. The proponents of the Amendment could not have been clearer about the intent to allow legitimate defense continuances. As the Judiciary Committee explained:

The Committee intends for this right to allow victims to have the trial of the accused completed as quickly as is reasonable under all of the circumstances of the case, giving both the prosecution and the defense a reasonable period of time to prepare. The right would not require or permit a judge to proceed to trial if a criminal defendant is not adequately represented by counsel.<sup>120</sup>

Such a right, while not treading on any legitimate interest of a defendant, will safeguard vital interests of victims. Victims’ advocates have offered repeated examples of abusive delays by defendants designed solely for tactical advantage rather than actual preparation of

---

<sup>116</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 66 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

<sup>117</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 471; see also Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1706–08 (“[L]egislation enacted under § 3 of the . . . Amendment to enforce the right to final disposition free from unreasonable delay may conflict with the right to effective assistance of counsel and with basic due process rights.”).

<sup>118</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999).

<sup>119</sup>A.B.A., SUGGESTED GUIDELINES FOR REDUCING ADVERSE EFFECTS OF CASE CONTINUANCES AND DELAYS ON CRIME VICTIMS AND WITNESSES 4 (1985).

<sup>120</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 3 (1998); see also 1998 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 26, at 37–38 (statement of Prof. Paul Cassell) (discussing factors that could be used to evaluate victims’ claims of unreasonable delay).

the defense of a case.<sup>121</sup> Abusive delays appear to be particularly common when the victim of the crime is a child, for whom each day up until the case is resolved can seem like an eternity.<sup>122</sup> Such cases present a strong justification for this provision in the Amendment. Nonetheless, writing in this Symposium, Professor Mosteller advances the proposition that this right “should undergo rigorous debate on [its] merits and should not slide in under the cover of a campaign largely devoted to giving victims’ rights to notice and to participate in criminal proceedings.”<sup>123</sup> This seems a curious argument, as the victims community has tried to debate this right “on its merits” for years. As long ago as 1982, the President’s Task Force on Victims of Crime offered suggestions for protecting a victim’s interest in a prompt disposition of the case.<sup>124</sup> In the years since then, it has been hard to find critics of victims’ rights willing to contend, on the merits, the need for protecting victims against abusive delay.<sup>125</sup> If anything, the time has arrived for the opponents of the victim’s right to proceedings free from unreasonable delay to address the serious problem of unwarranted delay in criminal proceedings or to concede that, here too, a strong case for the Amendment exists.

B. Prosecution-Oriented Challenges to the Amendment

Some objections to victims’ rights rest not on alleged harm to defendants’ interests but rather on alleged harm to the interests of the prosecution. Often these objections surprisingly come from persons not typically solicitous of prosecution concerns,<sup>126</sup> suggesting that some skepticism may be warranted. In any event, the arguments lack foundation.

---

<sup>121</sup>See, e.g., 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 115–16 (statement of Paul G. Cassell, Professor of Law, University of Utah College of Law) (describing such a case); see also Paul G. Cassell & Evan S. Strassberg, Evidence of Repeated Acts of Rape and Child Molestation: Reforming Utah Law to Permit the Propensity Inference, 1998 UTAH L. REV. 145, 146 (discussing case where defendant delayed trial three years by refusing to hire counsel and falsely claiming indigency).

<sup>122</sup>See Cassell, supra note 33, at 1402–05 (providing illustration).

<sup>123</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 471.

<sup>124</sup>See PRESIDENT’S TASK FORCE ON VICTIMS OF CRIME, FINAL REPORT 76 (1982).

<sup>125</sup>Cf. Henderson, supra note 14, at 417 (conceding that “reasonableness” language might “allow judges to ferret out instances of dilatory tactics while recognizing the genuine need for time,” but concluding that constitutional amendment is not needed to confer this power on judges).

<sup>126</sup>See, e.g., Scott Wallace, Mangling the Constitution: The Folly of the Victims’ Rights Amendment, WASH. POST, June 28, 1996, at A21 (op-ed piece from special counsel with National Legal Aid and Defender Association warning that Amendment would harm police and prosecutors).

It is sometimes argued that only the State should direct criminal prosecutions. This claim might have some bite against a proposal to allow victims to initiate or otherwise control the course of criminal prosecutions,<sup>127</sup> but it has little force against the proposed amendment. The Victims' Rights Amendment assumes a prosecution-directed system and simply grafts victims' rights onto it. Victims receive notification of decisions that the prosecution makes and, indeed, have the right to provide information to the court at appropriate junctures, such as bail hearings, plea bargaining, and sentencing. However, the prosecutor still files the complaint and moves it through the system, making decisions not only about which charges, if any, to file, but also about which investigative leads to pursue and which witnesses to call at trial. While the victim can follow her "own case down the assembly line" in Professor Beloof's colorful metaphor,<sup>128</sup> the fact remains that the prosecutor runs the assembly line. This general approach of grafting victims' rights onto the existing system mirrors the approach followed by all of the various state victims' amendments, and few have been heard to argue that the result has been interference with legitimate prosecution interests.

Perhaps an interferes-with-the-prosecutor objection might be refined to apply only against a victim's right to be heard on plea bargains, since this right arguably hampers a prosecutor's ability to terminate the prosecution. But today, it is already the law of many jurisdictions that the court must determine whether to accept or reject a proposed plea bargain after weighing all relevant interests.<sup>129</sup> Given that <sup>127</sup>See, e.g., Peter L. Davis, The Crime Victim's "Right" to a Criminal Prosecution: A Proposed Model Statute for the Governance of Private Criminal Prosecutions, 38 DEPAUL L. REV. 329, 330 (1989) (proposing statute to govern private criminal prosecutions). See generally DOUGLAS BELOOF, VICTIMS IN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE 235-357 (1999) (comprehensively discussing current means of victim involvement in charging process). Allowing victims to initiate their own prosecutions is no novelty, as it is consistent with the English common-law tradition of private prosecutions, brought to the American colonies. See 1 SIR JAMES F. STEPHEN, A HISTORY OF THE CRIMINAL LAW OF ENGLAND 493-503 (1883); Shirley S. Abrahamson, Redefining Roles: The Victims' Rights Movement, 1985 UTAH L. REV. 517, 521-22; Juan Cardenas, The Crime Victim in the Prosecutorial Process, 9 HARV. J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 359, 384 (1986); Josephine Gittler, Expanding the Role of the Victim in a Criminal Action: An Overview of Issues and Problems, 11 PEPP. L. REV. 117, 125-26 (1984); William F. McDonald, Towards a Bicentennial Revolution in Criminal Justice: The Return of the Victim, 13 AM. CRIM. L. REV. 649, 651-54 (1976).

---

<sup>128</sup>Belooof, supra note 9, at [10] (referring to HERBERT PACKER, THE LIMITS OF CRIMINAL SANCTION 163 (1968)).

<sup>129</sup>For cogent explication of the law on this issue, see BELOOF, supra note 128, at 462-88 (1999). See also NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE JUDICIARY ON THE RIGHTS OF VICTIMS OF CRIME, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED JUDICIAL PRACTICES 10 (1983) (recommending victim participation in plea negotiations).

victims undeniably have relevant, if not compelling, interests in proposed pleas, the Amendment neither breaks new theoretical ground nor displaces any legitimate prosecution interest. Instead, victim statements simply provide more information for the court to consider in making its decision. The available empirical evidence also suggests that victim participation in the plea bargaining process does not burden the courts and produces greater victim satisfaction even where, as is often the case, victims ultimately do not influence the outcome.<sup>130</sup>

In addition, critics of victim involvement in the plea process almost invariably overlook the long-standing acceptance of judicial review of plea bargains. These critics portray pleas as a matter solely for a prosecutor and a defense attorney to work out. They then display a handful of cases in which the defendant was ultimately acquitted at trial after courts had the temerity to reject a plea after hearing from victims. These cases, the critics maintain, prove that any outside review of pleas is undesirable.<sup>131</sup> The possibility of an erroneous rejection of a plea is,

---

<sup>130</sup>See, e.g., DEBORAH BUCHNER ET AL., INSLAW, INC., EVALUATION OF THE STRUCTURED PLEA NEGOTIATION PROJECT: EXECUTIVE SUMMARY 15, 21 (1984) (examining effects of structured plea negotiations in which judge, defendant, victim, prosecutor, and defense attorney all participate).

<sup>131</sup>See, e.g., S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 60–61 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

An illustration of this position is found in recent testimony by former federal prosecutor Beth Wilkinson. She argued that if victims had been heard during the Oklahoma City bombing case they would have prevented a government plea agreement with Michael Fortier and hurt the prosecution's case against Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols. See Testimony of Beth A. Wilkinson Before the Senate Judiciary Comm. on the Proposed Victims' Rights Amendment (Mar. 24, 1999) <<http://www.senate.gov/~judiciary/32499bw.htm>> (cited in Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 461 n.57). Wilkinson's argument is flawed because it assumes, without giving any good reason, that the judge would have simply rejected the plea if the victims had opposed it. In any event, the great majority of the victims would have supported the plea if the government had explained it to them. See Hearings on S.J. Res. 3 Before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 106th Cong. (forthcoming 1999) [hereinafter 1999 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings] (statement of Marsha A. Kight, Director of Families and Survivors United, Oklahoma City). Moreover, Fortier's testimony was not important to obtaining the convictions of McVeigh and Nichols, as the jurors later made clear. See id.

If anything, the handling of the Fortier plea demonstrates that even federal statutes do not effectively protect victims' rights. In an effort to ram the Fortier plea through, the prosecution did not notify the victims about it. See id. Both of these failures were apparent violations of federal law. See 42 U.S.C. § 10606(b)(3) (1994) (giving victims right "to be notified of court proceedings"); id. § 10606(b)(5) (giving victims right "to confer with [the] attorney for the government"); see supra 1999 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings (statement of Marsha Kight) (noting these violations of course, inherent in any system allowing review of a plea. In an imperfect world, judges will sometimes err in rejecting a plea that, in hindsight, should have been accepted. The salient question, however, is whether as a whole judicial review does more good than harm—that is, whether, on balance, courts make more right decisions than wrong ones. Just as cases can be cited where judges possibly made mistakes in rejecting a plea, so too cases exist where judges rejected plea bargains that were unwarranted.<sup>132</sup> These reported cases of victims persuading judges to reject unjust pleas form just a small part of the picture, because in many other cases, the mere prospect of victim objection undoubtedly has restrained prosecutors from bargaining cases away without good reason. My strong sense is that judicial review of pleas by courts after hearing from victims more often improves rather than retards justice. The failure of the critics to contend on the issue of net effect and the growing number of jurisdictions that allow victim input<sup>133</sup> is strong evidence for this conclusion.

Another prosecution-based objection to victims' rights is that, while they are desirable in theory, in practice they would be unduly expensive.<sup>134</sup> Here again, prominent critics must distort the language of the Amendment to manufacture a point in their favor. For example, the dissenting Senators claimed that the victim's right "not to be excluded from" the trial equates with a victim's right to be transported to the trial. They then conclude that "[t]he right not to be excluded could create a duty for the Government to provide travel and accommodation costs for victims who could not otherwise afford to attend."<sup>135</sup> This fanciful objection runs contrary to both the plain language of the Amendment and the explicit statements of its supporters and sponsors. The underlying right is not for victims to be transported to the courthouse, but simply to enter the courthouse once there. As the Senate Judiciary Committee report explains, "The right conferred is a negative one—a right 'not to be excluded'—to avoid the suggestion that an alternative formulation—a right 'to attend'—might carry with of federal law)."

<sup>132</sup>See, e.g., People v. Stringham, 253 Cal. Rptr. 484, 488–96 (Cal. App. 1988) (rejecting unwarranted plea bargain).

<sup>133</sup>See BELOOF, supra note 128, at 462.

<sup>134</sup>Sometimes the argument is cast not in terms of the Amendment diminishing prosecutorial resources, but rather victim resources. For example, Professor Henderson urges rejection of the Amendment on grounds that "we need to concentrate on things that aid recovery" by spending more on victim assistance and similar programs. Henderson, supra note 14, at 439; see also Lynne Henderson, Co-Opting Compassion: The Federal Victim's Rights Amendment, 10 ST. THOMAS L. REV. 579, 606 (1998) (noting benefits of programs to help victims deal with trauma). But there is no incompatibility between passing the Amendment and expanding such programs. Indeed, if the experience at the state level is any guide, passage of the Amendment will, if anything, lead to an increase in resources devoted to victim-assistance efforts because of their usefulness in implementing the rights contained in the Amendment.

<sup>135</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 63 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

it some governmental obligation to provide funding . . . for a victim to attend proceedings.”<sup>136</sup> The objection also runs counter to current interpretations of comparable language in other enactments. Federal law and many state constitutional amendments already extend to victims the arguably more expansive right “to be present” at or “to attend” court proceedings.<sup>137</sup> Yet no court has interpreted any one of these provisions as guaranteeing a victim a right of transportation and lodging at public expense. The federal amendment is even less likely to be construed to confer such an unprecedented entitlement because of its negative formulation.<sup>138</sup>

Once victims arrive at the courthouse, their attendance at proceedings imposes no significant incremental costs. In exercising their right to attend, victims simply can sit in the benches that have already been built. Even in cases involving hundreds of victims, innovative approaches such as closed-circuit broadcasting have proven feasible.<sup>139</sup> As for the victim’s right to be heard, the state experience reveals only a modest cost impact.<sup>140</sup>

Most of the cost arguments have focused on the Amendment’s notification provisions. Yet, it is already recognized as sound prosecuto-

---

<sup>136</sup>Id. at 26. The government, of course, already provides travel and accommodation expenses for the many victims who are witnesses in criminal cases.

<sup>137</sup>For right “to be present” formulations, see, for example, 42 U.S.C. § 10606(b)(4) (1994); ALASKA CONST. art. I, § 24; ARIZ. CONST. art. 2, § 2.1(A)(3)–(4); IDAHO CONST. art. I, § 22(4), (6); ILL. CONST. art. I, § 8.1; IND. CONST. art. I, § 13(b); MISS. CODE ANN. § 59-36-5(2) (1994); MO. CONST. art. I, § 32(1)(i); NEV. CONST. art. I, § 8(2)(b); N.M. CONST. art. II, § 24(A)(5); N.C. CONST. art. I, § 37(1)(a); OKLA. CONST. art. II, § 34A; S.C. CONST. art. I, § 24(A)(3); UTAH CONST. art. I, § 28(1)(b); see also ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-41-101 (1994) (Rule 616). For a right “to attend” formulation, see MICH. CONST. art. I, § 24(1).

<sup>138</sup>An Alabama statute also uses this phrasing without reported deleterious consequences. See ALA. CODE § 15-14-54 (1995) (recognizing victim’s right “not [to] be excluded from court or counsel table during the trial or hearing or any portion thereof.”).

<sup>139</sup>See 42 U.S.C.A. 10608(a) (West Supp. 1998) (authorizing closed circuit broadcast of trials whose venue has been moved more than 350 miles). This provision was used to broadcast proceedings in the Oklahoma City bombing trial in Denver back to Oklahoma City.

<sup>140</sup>See, e.g., NIJ SENTENCING STUDY, supra note 67, at 59 (stating that right to allocate in California “has not resulted in any noteworthy change in the workload of either the courts, probation departments, district attorneys’ offices or victim/witness programs”); id. at 69 (finding no noteworthy change in workload of California parole board); Erez, Victim Participation, supra note 69, at 22 (“Research in jurisdictions that allow victim participation indicates that including victims in the criminal justice process does not cause delays or additional expense.”); see also DAVIS ET AL., supra note 68, at 69 (noting that expanded victim impact program did not delay dispositions in New York).

rial practice to provide notice to victims. The National Prosecution Standards prepared by the National District Attorneys Association recommend that victims of violent crimes and other serious felonies should be informed, where feasible, of important steps in the criminal justice process.<sup>141</sup> In addition, many states have required that victims receive notice of a broad range of criminal justice proceedings. Nearly every state provides notice of the trial, sentencing, and parole hearings.<sup>142</sup> In spite of the fact that notice is already required in many circumstances across the country, the dissenting senators on the Judiciary Committee argued that the “potential costs of [the Amendment’s] constitutionally mandated notice requirements alone are staggering.”<sup>143</sup> Perhaps these predictions should simply be written off as harmless political rhetoric, but it is important to note that these suggestions are inconsistent with the relevant evidence. The experience with victim notice requirements already used at the state level suggests that the costs are relatively modest, particularly since computerized mailing lists and automated telephone calls can be used. The Arizona amendment serves as a good illustration. That amendment extends notice rights far beyond what is called for in the federal amendment;<sup>144</sup> yet, prosecutors have not found the expense burdensome in practice.<sup>145</sup> As a result of the existing state notification requirements, any incremental expense in Arizona from the federal amendment should be quite modest.

The only careful and objective assessment of the costs of the Amendment also reaches the conclusion that the costs are slight. The Congressional Budget Office reviewed the financial impact of not just the notification provisions of the Amendment, but of all its provisions, on the federal criminal justice system. The CBO concluded that, were the Amendment to be approved, it “could impose additional costs on

---

<sup>141</sup>NATIONAL DISTRICT ATTORNEYS ASS’N, NATIONAL PROSECUTION STANDARDS § 26.1, at 92 (2d ed. 1991).

<sup>142</sup>See NATIONAL VICTIM CENTER, 1996 VICTIMS’ RIGHTS SOURCEBOOK: A COMPILATION AND COMPARISON OF VICTIMS’ RIGHTS LEGISLATION 24 (collecting statutes).

<sup>143</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 62 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

<sup>144</sup>The Arizona Amendment extends notification rights to all crime victims, not just victims of violent crime as provided in the federal amendment. Compare ARIZ. CONST. art. II § 2.1(A)(3), (C), with S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 2 (1999).

<sup>145</sup>See Richard M. Romley, Constitutional Rights for Victims: Another Perspective, THE PROSECUTOR, May 1997, at 7 (noting modest cost of state amendment in Phoenix); 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 97 (1997) (statement of Barbara LaWall, Pima County Prosecutor) (noting that cost has not been problem in Tucson).

the Federal courts and the Federal prison system . . . . However, CBO does not expect any resulting costs to be significant.”<sup>146</sup>

This CBO report is a good one on which to wrap up the discussion of normative objections to the Amendment. Here is an opportunity to see how the critics’ claims fare when put to a fair-minded and neutral assessment. In fact, the critics’ often-repeated allegations of “staggering” costs were found to be exaggerated.

II. JUSTIFICATION CHALLENGES

A. The “Unnecessary” Constitutional Amendment

Because the normative arguments for victims’ rights are so powerful, some critics of the Victims’ Rights Amendment take a different tack and mount what might be described as a justification challenge. This approach concedes that victims’ rights may be desirable, but maintains that victims already possess such rights or can obtain such rights with relatively minor modifications in the current regime. The best single illustration of this attack is found in Professor Mosteller’s article in this Symposium, entitled The Unnecessary Victims’ Rights Amendment.<sup>147</sup> There, Mosteller contends that a constitutional amendment is not needed because the obstacles that victims face—described by Mosteller as “official indifference” and “excessive judicial deference”—can all be overcome without a constitutional amendment.<sup>148</sup>

Professor Mosteller’s clearly developed position is ultimately unpersuasive because it supplies a purely theoretical answer to a practical problem. In theory, victims’ rights could be safeguarded without a constitutional amendment. It would only be necessary for actors within the criminal justice system—judges, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and others—to suddenly begin fully respecting victims’ interests. The real-world question, however, is how to actually trigger such a shift in the Zeitgeist. For nearly two decades, victims have obtained a variety of measures to protect their rights. Yet, the prevailing view from those who work in the field is that these efforts “have all too often been ineffective.”<sup>149</sup> Rules to assist victims “frequently fail to

---

<sup>146</sup>CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE, S.J. RES. 44, reprinted in S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 39–40 (1998).

<sup>147</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13.

<sup>148</sup>Id. at 447; see also Mosteller, Recasting the Battle, supra note 13, at 1711–12 (developing similar argument).

<sup>149</sup>Tribe & Cassell, supra note 22, at B5; see, e.g., 1996 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 8, at 109 (statement of Steven Twist) (“There are victims of arson in Atlanta, GA, who have little or no say, as the victims . . . of an earlier era had about their victimization.”); id. at 30 (statement of John Walsh) (stating that victims’ rights amendments on state level do not work); id. at 26 (statement of Katherine Prescott) provide meaningful protection whenever they come into conflict with bureaucratic habit, traditional indifference, [or] sheer inertia.”<sup>150</sup> The view that state victim provisions have been and will continue to be often disregarded is widely shared, as some of the strongest opponents of the Amendment seem to concede the point. For example, Ellen Greenlee, President of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, bluntly and revealingly told Congress that the state victims’ amendments “so far have been treated as mere statements of principle that victims ought to be included and consulted more by prosecutors and courts. A state constitution is far . . . easier to ignore[] than the federal one.”<sup>151</sup>

Professor Mosteller attempts to minimize the current problems, conceding only that “existing victims’ rights are not uniformly enforced.”<sup>152</sup> This is a grudging concession to the reality that victims’ rights are often denied today, as numerous examples of violations of rights in the congressional record and elsewhere attest.<sup>153</sup> A comprehensive view comes from a careful study of the issue by the Department of Justice. As reported by the Attorney General, the Department found that efforts to secure victims’ rights through means other than a constitutional amendment have proved less than fully adequate. Victims’ rights advocates have sought reforms at the state level for the past twenty years, and many states have responded with state statutes and constitutional provisions that seek to guarantee victims’ rights. However, these efforts have failed to fully safeguard victims’ rights. These significant state efforts simply are not sufficiently consistent, comprehensive, or authoritative to safeguard victims’ rights.<sup>154</sup>

Similarly, an exhaustive report from those active in the field concluded that “[a] victims’ rights constitutional amendment is the only legal measure strong enough to rectify the current inconsistencies in victims’ rights laws that vary significantly from jurisdiction to jurisdiction on the state and federal levels.”<sup>155</sup>

Hard statistical evidence on noncompliance with victims’ rights laws confirms these general conclusions about inadequate protection. A 1998 report from the National Institute of Justice (“NIJ”) found that many victims are denied their rights and concluded that “enactment of (“Victims’ roles in the prosecution of cases will always be that of second-class citizens” if victims’ rights are only specified in state statutes).

<sup>150</sup>Tribe & Cassell, supra note 22, at B5.

<sup>151</sup>1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 7, at 147.

<sup>152</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at [4].

<sup>153</sup>See, e.g., 1998 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 26, at 103–06 (statement of Marlene Young).

<sup>154</sup>1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 64 (statement of Att’y Gen. Reno).

<sup>155</sup>OFFICE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME, U.S. DEP’T OF JUSTICE, NEW DIRECTIONS FROM THE FIELD: VICTIMS’ RIGHTS AND SERVICES FOR THE 21ST CENTURY 10 (1998).

State laws and State constitutional amendments alone appears to be insufficient to guarantee the full provision of victims' rights in practice."<sup>156</sup> The report found numerous examples of victims not provided rights to which they were entitled. For example, even in several states identified as giving "strong protection" to victims rights, fewer than 60% of the victims were notified of the sentencing hearing and fewer than 40% were notified of the pretrial release of the defendant.<sup>157</sup> A follow-up analysis of the same data found that racial minorities are less likely to be afforded their rights under the patchwork of existing statutes.<sup>158</sup> Professor Mosteller dismisses these figures with the essentially ad hominem attack that they were collected by the National Victim Center, which supports a victims' rights amendment.<sup>159</sup> However, the data themselves were collected by an independent polling firm.<sup>160</sup> Mosteller also cites one internal Justice Department reviewer who stated during the review process in conclusory terms that the report was unsatisfactory and should not be published.<sup>161</sup> The conclusion of the NIJ review process, however, after hearing from all reviewers, including apparently favorable peer reviews, was to publish the study.<sup>162</sup> Finally, Mosteller criticizes the data as resting on unverified self-reported data from crime victims. However, since the research question was how many victims had been afforded their rights, asking victims, rather than the agencies suspected of failing to provide rights, would appear to be a standard methodological approach. The study also obtained a very high response rate (83%) from the victims interviewed,<sup>163</sup> suggesting that the

---

<sup>156</sup>NAT'L INST. OF JUSTICE, RESEARCH IN BRIEF, THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—DOES LEGAL PROTECTION MAKE A DIFFERENCE? 1 (Dec. 1998) [hereinafter NIJ REPORT]. An earlier version of essentially the same report is reprinted in 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 15.

<sup>157</sup>NIJ REPORT, supra note 157, at 4 exh.1.

<sup>158</sup>See NATIONAL VICTIM CENTER, STATUTORY AND CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION OF VICTIMS' RIGHTS, IMPLEMENTATION AND IMPACT ON CRIME VICTIMS, SUB-REPORT: COMPARISON OF WHITE AND NON-WHITE CRIME VICTIM RESPONSES REGARDING VICTIMS' RIGHTS 5 (1997) [hereinafter NVC RACE SUB-REPORT] ("[I]n many instances non-white victims were less likely to be provided those [crime victims'] rights . . .").

<sup>159</sup>See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 445 n.13.

<sup>160</sup>See NIJ REPORT, supra note 157, at 11.

<sup>161</sup>See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at [7] n.13 (citing Memorandum from Sam McQuade, Program Manager, NIJ, to Jeremy Travis, Director, NIJ (May 16, 1997)).

<sup>162</sup>NAT'L INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, GUIDE TO WRITING REPORTS FOR NIJ: POLICY, REQUIREMENTS, AND PROCEDURES 3 (1998) (listing procedures for NIJ's publication process, including external peer review panel).

<sup>163</sup>See NIJ REPORT, supra note 157, at 3. Professor Mosteller criticizes the NIJ's reported 83% response figure, suggesting that it was actually as low as 29%. See Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 445 n.13. I will not take time findings are not due to any kind of responder bias. And given the magnitude of the alleged failures to provide victims' rights—ranging up to 60% and more—the general dismissal picture presented by the NIJ report is clear. Opponents of the Amendment offer no competing statistics, and such other data as exist tend to corroborate the NIJ findings of substantial noncompliance.<sup>164</sup>

Given such statistics, it is interesting to consider what the defenders of the status quo believe is an acceptable level of violation of rights. Suppose new statistics could be gathered that show that victims' rights are respected in 75% of all cases, or 90%, or even 98%. America is so far from a 98% rate for affording victims rights that my friends on the front lines of providing victim services probably will dismiss this exercise as a meaningless law school hypothetical. But would a 98% compliance rate demonstrate that the amendment is "unnecessary"? Even a 98% enforcement rate would leave numerous victims unprotected. As the Supreme Court has observed in response to the claim that the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule affects "only" about 2% of all cases in this country, "small percentages . . . mask a large absolute number of" cases.<sup>165</sup> A rough calculation suggests that even if the Victims' Rights Amendment improved treatment for only 2% of the violent crime cases it affects, a total of about 30,000 victims would benefit each year.<sup>166</sup> ~~Even more~~ importantly, we would not tolerate a here to explain why I disagree with his 29% calculation, but simply press the point that he offers no specific reason for believing that the basic finding of the NIJ would have been any different had the response rate been higher.

<sup>164</sup>See, e.g., HILLENBRAND & SMITH, supra note 69, at 112 (noting that prosecutors and victims consistently report that victims are "not usually" given notice or consulted in significant proportion of cases); Erez, Victim Participation, supra note 69, at 26 (finding that victims are rarely informed of right to make statements and victim impact statements are not always prepared).

<sup>165</sup>United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 907–08 n.6 (1984); see also CRAIG M. BRADLEY, THE FAILURE OF THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE REVOLUTION 43–44 (1993) (worrying about effect of exclusionary rule, if 5% of cases are dismissed due to Miranda violations and 5% are dismissed due to search problems).

<sup>166</sup>FBI estimates suggest an approximate total of about 2,303,600 arrests for violent crimes each year, broken down as follows: 729,900 violent crimes within the crime index (murder, forcible rape, robbery, aggravated assault), 1,329,000 other assaults, 95,800 sex offenses, and 149,800 offenses against family and children. See FED. BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, UNIFORM CRIME REPORTS: CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES 1996, at 214 tbl.29 (1997). A rough estimate is that about 70% of these cases will be accepted for prosecution, within the adult system. See Brian Forst, Prosecution and Sentencing, in CRIME 363–64 (James Q. Wilson & Joan Petersilia eds., 1995). Assuming the Amendment would benefit 2% of the victims within these charged cases produces the figure in text. For further discussion of issues surrounding such extrapolations, see Paul G. Cassell, Miranda's Social Costs: An Empirical Reassessment, 90 NW. U. L. REV. 387, 438–40; Paul G. Cassell, Protecting the Innocent from False Confessions and Lost Confessions—And From Miranda, 88 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 497, 514–16 (1998).

mere 98% “success” rate in enforcing other important rights. Suppose that, in opposition to the Bill of Rights, it had been argued that 98% of all Americans could worship in the religious tradition of their choice, 98% of all newspapers could publish without censorship from the government, 98% of criminal defendants had access to counsel, and 98% of all prisoners were free from cruel and unusual punishment. Surely the effort still would have been mounted to move the totals closer to 100%. Given the wide acceptance of victims’ rights, they deserve the same respect.

Professor Mosteller does not spend much time reviewing the level of compliance in the current system, instead moving quickly to the claim that the Amendment will “not automatically eliminate[]” the problem of official indifference to victims’ rights.<sup>167</sup> But the key issue is not whether the Amendment will “eliminate” indifference, but rather whether it will reduce indifference—thereby improving the lot of victims. Here the posture of the Amendment’s critics is quite inconsistent. On the one hand, they posit dramatic damaging consequences that will reverberate throughout the system after the Amendment’s adoption, even though those consequences are entirely unintended. Yet, at the same time, they are unwilling to concede that the Amendment will make even modest positive consequences in the areas that it specifically addresses.

The best view of the Amendment’s effects is a moderate one that avoids the varying extremes of the critics. Of course the Amendment will not eliminate all violations of victims’ rights, particularly because practical politics have stripped from the Amendment its civil damages provision.<sup>168</sup> But neither will the Amendment amount to an ineffectual response to official indifference. On this point, it is useful to consider the steps involved in adopting the Amendment. Both the House and Senate of the United States Congress would pass the measure by two-thirds votes. Then a full three-quarters of the states would ratify the provision.<sup>169</sup> No doubt these events would generate dramatic public awareness of the nature of the rights and the importance of providing them. In short, the adoption of the Amendment would constitute a major national event. One might even describe it as a “constitutional moment” (of the old fashioned variety) where the nation recognizes the crucial importance of protecting certain rights for its citizens.<sup>170</sup> Were such events to occur, the lot of crime victims likely would improve considerably. The available social science research suggests that the primary barrier to successful implementation of victims’ rights is “the

---

<sup>167</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 447].

<sup>168</sup>See S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 2 (1999). See generally Cassell, supra note 33, at 1418–21 (discussing damages actions under victims’ rights amendments).

<sup>169</sup>See U.S. CONST. art. V.

<sup>170</sup>Cf. 1 BRUCE ACKERMAN, WE THE PEOPLE passim (1990) (discussing “constitutional moments”).

socialization of [lawyers] in a legal culture and structure that do not recognize the victim as a legitimate party in criminal proceedings.”<sup>171</sup> Professor Mosteller seems to agree generally with this view, explaining that “officials fail to honor victims’ rights largely as a result of inertia, past learning, insensitivity to the unfamiliar needs of victims, lack of training, and inadequate or misdirected institutional incentives.”<sup>172</sup> A constitutional amendment, reflecting the instructions of the nation to its criminal justice system, is perfectly designed to attack these problems and develop a new legal culture supportive of victims. To be sure, one can paint the prospect of such a change in culture as “entirely speculative.”<sup>173</sup> Yet this means nothing more than that, until the Amendment passes, we will not have an opportunity to precisely assay its positive effects. Constitutional amendments have changed our legal culture in other areas, and clearly the logical prediction is that a victims’ amendment would go a long way towards curing official indifference. This hypothesis is also consistent with the findings of the NIJ study on state implementation of victims’ rights. The study concluded that “[w]here legal protection is strong, victims are more likely to be aware of their rights, to participate in the criminal justice system, to view criminal justice system officials favorably, and to express more overall satisfaction with the system.”<sup>174</sup> It is hard to imagine any stronger protection for victims’ rights than a federal constitutional amendment. Moreover, we can confidently expect that those who will most often benefit from the enhanced consistency in protecting victims’ rights will be members of racial minorities, the poor, and other disempowered groups. Such victims are the first to suffer under the current, “lottery” implementation of victims’ rights.<sup>175</sup>

Professor Mosteller devotes much of his article to challenging the claim that the Amendment is needed to block excessive official

---

<sup>171</sup>Erez, Victim Participation, supra note 69, at 29; see also WILLIAM PIZZI, TRIALS WITHOUT TRUTH: WHY OUR SYSTEM OF CRIMINAL TRIALS HAS BECOME AN EXPENSIVE FAILURE AND WHAT WE NEED TO DO TO REBUILD IT 196–97 (1999) (discussing problems with American trial culture); Pizzi, supra note 10, at 359–60 (noting trial culture emphasis on winning and losing that may overlook victims); William T. Pizzi & Walter Perron, Crime Victims in German Courtrooms: A Comparative Perspective on American Problems, 32 STAN. J. INT’L L. 37, 37–40 (1996) (“So poor is the level of communication that those within the system often seem genuinely bewildered by the victims’ rights movement, even to the point of suggesting rather condescendingly that victims are seeking a solace from the criminal justice system that they ought to be seeking elsewhere.”).

<sup>172</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 447.

<sup>173</sup>Id. at 445.

<sup>174</sup>NIJ REPORT, supra note 157, at 10.

<sup>175</sup>See supra note 159 and accompanying text (noting that minority victims are least likely to be afforded rights today); cf. Henderson, supra note 14, at 419–20 (criticizing “lottery approach” to affording victims’ rights).

deference to the rights of criminal defendants. Proponents of the Amendment have argued that, given two hundred years of well-established precedent supporting defendants' rights, the apparently novel victims' rights found in state constitutional amendments and elsewhere too frequently have been ignored on spurious grounds of alleged conflict.<sup>176</sup> Professor Mosteller, however, rejects this argument on the ground that there is no "currently valid appellate opinion reversing a defendant's conviction because of enforcement of a provision of state or federal law or state constitution that granted a right to a victim."<sup>177</sup> As a result, he concludes, there is no evidence of a "significant body of law that would warrant the remedy of a constitutional amendment."<sup>178</sup>

This argument does not refute the case for the Amendment, but rather is a mere straw man created by the opponents. The important issue is not whether victims' rights are thwarted by a body of appellate law, but rather whether they are blocked by any obstacles, including most especially obstacles at the trial level where victims must first attempt to secure their rights. One would naturally expect to find few appellate court rulings rejecting victims' rights; there are few victims' rulings anywhere, let alone in appellate courts. To get to the appellate level—in this context, the "mansion" of the criminal justice system—victims first must pass through the "gatehouse"—the trial court.<sup>179</sup> That trip is not an easy one. Indeed, one of the main reasons for the Amendment is that victims find it extraordinarily difficult to get anywhere close to appellate courts. To begin with, victims may be unaware of their rights or discouraged by prosecutors from asserting them. Even if aware and interested in asserting their rights in court, victims may lack the resources to obtain counsel. Finding counsel, too, will be unusually difficult, since the field of victims' rights is a new one in which few lawyers specialize.<sup>180</sup> Time will be short, since many victims' issues, particularly those revolving around sequestration rules, arise at the start of or even during the trial. Even if a lawyer is found, she must arrange to file an interlocutory appeal in which the appellate court will be asked to intervene in ongoing trial proceedings in the court below. If victims can overcome all these hurdles, the courts still possess an astonishing arsenal of other procedural obstacles to prevent

---

<sup>176</sup>See, e.g., infra Part II.B (discussing victims' rights in Oklahoma City bombing case).

<sup>177</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 450.

<sup>178</sup>Id. at 451; see also S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 51-52 (1998).

<sup>179</sup>Cf. Yale Kamisar, Equal Justice in the Gatehouses and Mansions of American Criminal Procedure, in YALE KAMISAR ET AL., CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN OUR TIME 19 (1965) (famously developing this analogy in context of police interrogation).

<sup>180</sup>See Henderson, supra note 14, at 427. Hopefully this situation may improve with the publication of Professor Beloof's law school casebook on victim's rights, see BELOOF, supra note 128, which may encourage more training in this area.

victim actions, as Professor Bandes's paper in this Symposium cogently demonstrates.<sup>181</sup> In light of all these hurdles, appellate opinions about victim issues seem, to put it mildly, quite unlikely.

One can interpret the resulting dearth of rulings as proving, as Professor Mosteller would have it, that no reported appellate decisions strike down victims' rights. Yet it is equally true that, at best, only a handful of reported appellate decisions uphold victims' rights. This fact tends to provide an explanation for the frequent reports of denials of victims' rights at the trial level. Given that these rights are newly created and the lack of clear appellate sanction, one would expect trial courts to be wary of enforcing these rights against the inevitable, if invariably imprecise, claims of violations of a defendant's rights.<sup>182</sup> Narrow readings will be encouraged by the asymmetries of appeal—defendants can force a new trial if their rights are denied, while victims cannot.<sup>183</sup> Victims, too, may be reluctant to attempt to assert untested rights for fear of giving a defendant grounds for a successful appeal and a new trial.<sup>184</sup>

In short, nothing in the appellate landscape provides a basis for concluding that all is well with victims in the nation's trial courts. The Amendment's proponents have provided ample examples of victims denied rights in the day-to-day workings of the criminal trials. The Amendment's opponents seem tacitly to concede the point by shifting the debate to the more rarified appellate level. Thus, here again, the opponents have not fully engaged the case for the Amendment.

As one final fallback position, the Amendment's critics maintain that it will not "eliminate" the problems in enforcing victims' rights because some level of uncertainty will always remain.<sup>185</sup> However, as

---

<sup>181</sup>See Susan Bandes, supra note 11, passim; see also Susan Bandes, The Negative Constitution: A Critique, 88 MICH. L. REV. 2271, 2273 (1991) [hereinafter Bandes, The Negative Constitution] (discussing courts' reluctance to review government inaction in protection of constitutional rights); Susan Bandes, The Idea of a Case, 42 STAN. L. REV. 227, 229–30 (1990) (noting how courts limit and define issues in case).

<sup>182</sup>As shown in Part I.A, supra, victims' rights do not actually conflict with defendant's rights. Frequently, however, it is the defendant's mere claim of alleged conflict, not carefully considered by the trial court, that ends up producing (along with the other contributing factors) the denial of victims' rights.

<sup>183</sup>See Kate Stith, The Risk of Legal Error in Criminal Cases: Some Consequences of the Asymmetry in the Right to Appeal, 57 U. CHI. L. REV. 1, 5–7 (1990) (examining consequences of asymmetric risk of legal error in criminal cases); see also Erez & Rogers, supra note 69, at 228–29 (noting reluctance of South Australian judges to rely on victim evidence because of appeal risk).

<sup>184</sup>See Paul G. Cassell, Fight for Victims' Justice is Going Strong, THE DESERET NEWS, July 10, 1996, at A7 (illustrating this problem with uncertain Utah case law on victim's right to be present).

<sup>185</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 462.

noted before, the issue is not eliminating uncertainty, but reducing it. Surely giving victims explicit constitutional protection will vindicate their rights in many circumstances where today the trial judge would be uncertain how to proceed. Moreover, the Amendment's clear conferral of "standing" on victims<sup>186</sup> will help to develop a body of precedents on how victims are to be treated. There is, accordingly, every reason to expect that the Amendment will reduce uncertainties substantially and improve the lot of crime victims.

B. The Oklahoma City Illustration of the "Necessary" Amendment

On assessing whether the Amendment is "necessary," it might be said that "a page of history is worth a volume of logic."<sup>187</sup> To be sure, one can cite examples of victims who have received fair treatment in the criminal justice system, as Professor Henderson's moving narrative about her treatment during the prosecution of her rapist demonstrates.<sup>188</sup> Nonetheless, this and other examples hardly make the case against reform, as even Henderson seems to concede that there is a need for improvement in many cases.<sup>189</sup> The question then becomes whether a constitutional amendment would operate to spur that improvement. Here it is necessary to look not at the system's successes in ruling on victims' claims, but rather at its failures. The Oklahoma City bombing case provides an illustration of the difficulties victims face in having their claims considered by appellate courts.

During a pre-trial motion hearing in the Timothy McVeigh prosecution, the district court sua sponte issued a ruling precluding any victim who wished to provide victim impact testimony at sentencing from observing any proceeding in the case.<sup>190</sup> The court based its ruling on Rule 615 of the Federal Rules of Evidence—the so-called "rule on witnesses."<sup>191</sup> In the hour that the court then gave to victims to make this wrenching decision about testifying, some of the victims opted to watch the proceedings; others decided to leave Denver to remain eligible to provide impact testimony.<sup>192</sup>

Thirty-five victims and survivors of the bombing then filed a motion asserting their own standing to raise their rights under federal <sup>186</sup>See S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 2 (1999) ("Only the victim or the victim's legal representative shall have standing to assert the rights established by this article . . .").

---

<sup>187</sup>New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, 256 U.S. 345, 349 (1921) (Holmes, J.).

<sup>188</sup>See Henderson, supra note 14, at 431–39.

<sup>189</sup>See id. at 432.

<sup>190</sup>See United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68, 1996 WL 366268, at *2 (D. Colo. June 26, 1996).

<sup>191</sup>Id. at **2–3 (discussing application of FED. R. EVID. 615).

<sup>192</sup>See 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 73 (statement of Marsha Kight).

law and, in the alternative, seeking leave to file a brief on the issue as amici curiae.<sup>193</sup> The victims noted that the district court apparently had overlooked the Victims' Bill of Rights, a federal statute guaranteeing victims the right (among others) "to be present at all public court proceedings, unless the court determines that testimony by the victim would be materially affected if the victim heard other testimony at trial."<sup>194</sup>

The district court then held a hearing to reconsider the issue of excluding victim witnesses.<sup>195</sup> The court first denied the victims' motion asserting standing to present their own claims, allowing them only the opportunity to file amicus briefs.<sup>196</sup> After argument by the Department of Justice and by the defendants, the court denied the motion for reconsideration.<sup>197</sup> It concluded that victims present during court proceedings would not be able to separate the "experience of trial" from "the experience of loss from the conduct in question," and, thus, their testimony at a sentencing hearing would be inadmissible.<sup>198</sup> Unlike the original ruling, which was explicitly premised on Rule 615, the October 4 ruling was more ambiguous, alluding to concerns under the Constitution, the common law, and the rules of evidence.<sup>199</sup>

The victims then filed a petition for writ of mandamus in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit seeking review of the district court's ruling.<sup>200</sup> Because the procedures for victims appeals were unclear, the victims filed a separate set of documents appealing from the <sup>193</sup>Motion of Marsha and Tom Kight et al. and the National Organization for Victim Assistance Asserting Standing to Raise Rights Under the Victims' Bill of Rights and Seeking Leave to File a Brief as Amici Curiae, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1996 WL 570841 (D. Colo. Sept. 30, 1996). I represented a number of the victims on this matter on a pro bono basis, along with able co-counsel Robert Hoyt, Arnon Siegel, and Karan Bhatia of the Washington, D.C. law firm of Wilmer, Cutler, and Pickering, and Sean Kendall of Boulder, Colorado. For a somewhat fuller recounting of the victims' issues in the case, see 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 106–13 (statement of Paul Cassell).

---

<sup>194</sup>42 U.S.C. § 10606(b)(4) (1994). The victims also relied on a similar provision found in the authorization for closed circuit broadcasting of the trial, 42 U.S.C.A. § 10608(a) (West Supp. 1998), and on a First Amendment right of access to public court proceedings, see Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 577 (1980) (finding First Amendment right of court access).

<sup>195</sup>See United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68, 1996 WL 578525, at **16–25 (D. Colo. Oct. 4, 1996).

<sup>196</sup>See id. at *16.

<sup>197</sup>See id. at *25.

<sup>198</sup>Id. at *24.

<sup>199</sup>See id.

<sup>200</sup>Petition for Writ of Mandamus, Kight et al. v. Matsch, No. 96-1484 (10th Cir. Nov. 6, 1996) (on file with author).

ruling.<sup>201</sup> Similarly, the Department of Justice, uncertain of precisely how to proceed procedurally, filed both an appeal and a petition for a writ of mandamus.

Three months later, a panel of the Tenth Circuit rejected—without oral argument—both the victims’ and the Department’s claims on jurisdictional grounds. With respect to the victims’ challenges, the court concluded that the victims lacked “standing” under Article III of the Constitution because they had no “legally protected interest” to be present at the trial and consequently had suffered no “injury in fact” from their exclusion.<sup>202</sup> The Tenth Circuit also found that the victims had no right to attend the trial under any First Amendment right of access.<sup>203</sup> Finally, the Tenth Circuit rejected, on jurisdictional grounds, the appeal and mandamus petition filed by the Department.<sup>204</sup> Efforts by both the victims and the Department of Justice to obtain a rehearing were unsuccessful,<sup>205</sup> even with the support of separate briefs urging rehearing from forty-nine members of Congress, all six Attorneys General in the Tenth Circuit, and some of the leading victims’ groups in the nation.<sup>206</sup>

In the meantime, the victims, supported by the Oklahoma Attorney General’s Office, sought remedial legislation in Congress clearly stating that victims should not have to decide between testifying at sentencing and watching the trial. The Victims’ Rights Clarification Act of 1997 was introduced to provide that watching a trial does not constitute

---

<sup>201</sup>See United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325, 328 (10th Cir. 1997).

<sup>202</sup>Id. at 334–35.

<sup>203</sup>See id. at 335; see supra note 195 (discussing right of access for press under First Amendment).

<sup>204</sup>See McVeigh, 106 F.3d at 333.

<sup>205</sup>See Order, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-1469, 1997 WL 128893, at *3 (10th Cir. Mar. 11, 1997).

<sup>206</sup>See Brief for Amici Curiae Washington Legal Foundation and United States Senators Don Nickles and 48 Other Members of Congress, United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325 (10th Cir. Feb. 14, 1997) (No. 96-1469) (on file with author) (warning that decision meant that victims of federal crimes will never be heard for violations of their rights); Brief for Amici Curiae States of Oklahoma, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming Supporting the Suggestion for Rehearing and the Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc by the Oklahoma City Bombing Victims and the United States, United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325 (10th Cir. Feb. 14, 1997) (No. 96-1469) (on file with author) (warning that decision created “an ‘important problem’ for the administration of justice within the Tenth Circuit”); Brief for Amici Curiae National Victims Center, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the National Victims’ Constitutional Amendment Network, Justice for Surviving Victims, Inc., Concerns of Police Survivors, Inc., and Citizens for Law and Order, Inc., in Support of Rehearing, United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325 (10th Cir. Feb. 17, 1997) (No. 96-1469) (on file with author) (warning that decision will “preclude anyone from exercising any rights afforded under the Victims’ Bill of Rights”).

grounds for denying the chance to provide an impact statement. Representative Wexler, a supporter of the legislation, observed the painful choice that the district court's ruling was forcing on the victims:

As one of the Oklahoma City survivors put it, a man who lost one eye in the explosion, "It's not going to affect our testimony at all. I have a hole in my head that's covered with titanium. I nearly lost my hand. I think about it every minute of the day."

That man, incidentally, is choosing to watch the trial and to forfeit his right to make a victim impact statement. Victims should not have to make that choice.<sup>207</sup>

The measure passed the House by a vote of 418 to 19.<sup>208</sup> The next day, the Senate passed the measure by unanimous consent.<sup>209</sup> The following day, President Clinton signed the Act into law,<sup>210</sup> explaining that "when someone is a victim, he or she should be at the center of the criminal justice process, not on the outside looking in."<sup>211</sup>

The victims then promptly filed a motion with the district court asserting a right to attend under the new law.<sup>212</sup> The victims explained that the new law invalidated the court's earlier sequestration order and sought a hearing on the issue.<sup>213</sup> Rather than squarely uphold the new law, however, the district court entered a new order on victim-impact witness sequestration.<sup>214</sup> The court concluded that "any motions raising constitutional questions about this legislation would be premature and would present issues that are not now ripe for decision."<sup>215</sup> Moreover, the court held that it could address issues of possible prejudicial impact from attending the trial by conducting a voir dire of the witnesses after

---

<sup>207</sup>143 CONG. REC. H1050 (daily ed. Mar. 18, 1997) (statement of Rep. McCollum).

<sup>208</sup>See id. at H1068 (five members not voting).

<sup>209</sup>See 143 CONG. REC. S2509 (daily ed. Mar. 19, 1997) (statement of Sen. Nickles).

<sup>210</sup>See Pub. L. No. 105-6, codified at 18 U.S.C.A. § 3510 (West Supp. 1998).

<sup>211</sup>William J. Clinton, Statement by the President, Mar. 19, 1997 (visited May 17, 1999) <<http://www.pub.whitehouse.gov/uri-res/I2R?urn:pdi://oma.eop.gov.us/1997/3/20/6.text.1>>.

<sup>212</sup>See Memorandum of Marsha Kight et al. on the Victims Rights Clarification Act of 1997, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 144614, at *3 (D. Colo. Mar. 21, 1997).

<sup>213</sup>See Motion of Marsha Kight et al. for Hearing, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 144564, at *1 (D. Colo. Mar. 21, 1997).

<sup>214</sup>See Order Amending Order Under Rule 615, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 136343, at *3 (D. Colo. Mar. 25, 1997).

<sup>215</sup>Id.

the trial.<sup>216</sup> The district court also refused to grant the victims a hearing on the application of the new law, concluding that its ruling rendered their request “moot.”<sup>217</sup>

After that ruling, the Oklahoma City victim impact witnesses—once again—had to make a painful decision about what to do. Some of the victim impact witnesses decided not to observe the trial because of ambiguities and uncertainties in the court’s ruling, raising the possibility of excluding testimony from victims who attended the trial.<sup>218</sup> The Department of Justice also met with many of the impact witnesses, advising them of these substantial uncertainties in the law, and noting that any observation of the trial would create the possibility of exclusion of impact testimony.<sup>219</sup> To end this confusion, the victims filed a motion for clarification of the judge’s order.<sup>220</sup> The motion noted that “[b]ecause of the uncertainty remaining under the Court’s order, a number of the victims have been forced to give up their right to observe defendant McVeigh’s trial. This chilling effect has thus rendered the Victims’ Rights Clarification Act of 1997 . . . for practical purposes a nullity.”<sup>221</sup> Unfortunately, the effort to obtain clarification did not succeed, and McVeigh’s trial proceeded without further guidance for the victims.

After McVeigh was convicted, the victims filed a motion to be heard on issues pertaining to the new law.<sup>222</sup> Nonetheless, the court refused to allow the victims to be represented by counsel during argument on the law or during voir dire about the possible prejudicial impact of viewing the trial.<sup>223</sup> The court, however, concluded (as the

---

<sup>216</sup>See id.

<sup>217</sup>See Order Declaring Motion Moot, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 136344, at *1 (D. Colo. Mar. 25, 1997).

<sup>218</sup>See 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 111 (statement of Prof. Paul Cassell); id. at 70 (statement of Marsha Kight).

<sup>219</sup>See id. at 111 (statement of Prof. Paul Cassell).

<sup>220</sup>See Request of the Victims of the Oklahoma City Bombing and the National Organization for Victim Assistance for Clarification of the Order Amending the Order Under Rule 615, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 159969, at **1, 2 (D. Colo. Apr. 4, 1997) (requesting that court clarify ruling in which victim impact testimony could be denied).

<sup>221</sup>Id. at *2.

<sup>222</sup>See Motion of the Victims of the Oklahoma City Bombing to Reassert the Motion for a Hearing on the Application of the Victim Rights Clarification Act of 1997, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 312104, at *6 (D. Colo. June 2, 1997) (arguing for opportunity to participate in any argument or constitutionality and application of Act).

<sup>223</sup>See Hearing on Victims Rights Clarification Act, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 290019, at *7 (D. Colo. June 3, 1997) (concluding that statute does not “create[] standing for the persons who are identified as being victims had suggested all along) that no victim was in fact prejudiced as a result of watching the trial.<sup>224</sup>

This recounting of the details of the Oklahoma City bombing litigation leaves no doubt about the difficulties that victims face with mere statutory protection of their rights. For a number of the victims, the rights afforded in the Victims' Rights Clarification Act of 1997 and the earlier Victims' Bill of Rights were not protected. They did not observe the trial of defendant Timothy McVeigh because of lingering doubts about the constitutional status of these statutes.

Not only were these victims denied their right to observe the trial, but perhaps equally troubling is that the fact that they were never able to speak even a single word in court, through counsel, on this issue. This denial occurred in spite of legislative history specifically approving of victim participation. In passing the Victims' Rights Clarification Act, the House Judiciary Committee stated that it "assumes that both the Department of Justice and victims will be heard on the issue of a victim's exclusion, should a question of their exclusion arise under this section."<sup>225</sup> In the Senate, the primary sponsor of the bill similarly stated: "In disputed cases, the courts will hear from the Department of Justice, counsel for the affected victims, and counsel for the accused."<sup>226</sup> Yet, the victims were never heard.

Some might claim that this treatment of the Oklahoma City bombing victims should be written off as atypical. However, there is every reason to believe that the victims here were far more effective in attempting to vindicate their rights than victims in less notorious cases. The Oklahoma City bombing victims were mistreated while the media spotlight was on—when the nation was watching. The treatment of victims in forgotten courtrooms and trials is certainly no better, and in all likelihood much worse. Moreover, the Oklahoma City bombing victims had five lawyers working to press their claims in court—a law professor familiar with victims' rights, three lawyers at a prominent Washington, D.C. law firm, and a local counsel in Colorado—as well as an experienced and skilled group of lawyers from the Department of Justice. In the normal case, it often will be impossible for victims to locate a lawyer willing to pursue complex and unsettled issues about their rights without compensation. One must remember that crime most represented by counsel in filing that brief").

---

<sup>224</sup>See, e.g., Examination of Diane Leonard, United States v. McVeigh, No. 96-CR-68-M, 1997 WL 292341, at *4 (D. Colo. June 4, 1997) (testifying that she was not unduly influenced by trial proceedings).

<sup>225</sup>H.R. REP NO. 105-28, at 10 (1997) (emphasis added). Supporting this statement was the fact that, while the Victims Bill of Rights apparently barred some civil suits by victims, 42 U.S.C. § 10606(c), the new law contained no such provision. This was no accident. As the Report of the House Judiciary Committee pointedly explained: "The Committee points out that it has not included language in this statute that bars a cause of action by the victim, as it has done in other statutes affecting victims' rights." H.R. REP NO. 105-28 at 10 (1997).

<sup>226</sup>143 CONG. REC. S2507 (daily ed. Mar. 19, 1997) (statement of Sen. Nickles).

often strikes the poor and others in a weak position to retain counsel.<sup>227</sup> Finally, litigating claims concerning exclusion from the courtroom or other victims' rights promises to be quite difficult. For example, a victim may not learn that she will be excluded until the day the trial starts. Filing effective appellate actions in such circumstances promises to be practically impossible. It should therefore come as little surprise that this litigation was the first in which victims sought federal appellate court review of their rights under the Victims' Bill of Rights, even though that statute was passed in 1990.

The undeniable, and unfortunate, result of that litigation has been to establish—as the only reported federal appellate ruling—a precedent that will make effective enforcement of the federal victims' rights statutes quite difficult. It is now the law of the Tenth Circuit that victims lack “standing” to be heard on issues surrounding the Victims' Bill of Rights and, for good measure, that the Department of Justice may not take an appeal asserting rights for victims under the statute.<sup>228</sup> For all practical purposes, the treatment of crime victims' rights in federal court in Utah, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Wyoming has been remitted to the unreviewable discretion of individual federal district court judges. The fate of the Oklahoma City victims does not inspire confidence that all victims' rights will be fully enforced in the future. Even in other circuits, the Tenth Circuit ruling, while not controlling, may be treated as having persuasive value. If so, the Victims' Bill of Rights will effectively become a dead letter.

The Oklahoma City bombing victims would never have suffered these indignities if the Victims' Rights Amendment had been the law of the land. First, the victims would never have been subject to sequestration. The Amendment guarantees all victims the constitutional right “not to be excluded from[] any public proceedings relating to the crime.”<sup>229</sup> This would have prevented the sequestration order from being entered in the first place. Moreover, the Amendment affords victims the right “to be heard, if present, . . . at [a public] proceeding[] to determine a . . . sentence.”<sup>230</sup> This provision would have protected the victims' right to provide impact testimony. Finally, the Amendment provides that “the victim . . . shall have standing to assert the rights established by this article,”<sup>231</sup> a protection guaranteeing the victims, through counsel, the opportunity to be heard to protect those rights.

---

<sup>227</sup>See BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, VIOLENT CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES 8 (1991) (noting that crime is more likely to strike low-income families); cf. Henderson, supra note 135, at 579 (noting that many crime victims come from disempowered groups).

<sup>228</sup>See United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325, 335–36 (10th Cir. 1997) (finding that victims lack standing to challenge law).

<sup>229</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999).

<sup>230</sup>Id.

<sup>231</sup>Id. § 2.

Critics of the Victims' Rights Amendment have cited the Oklahoma City remedial legislation as an example of the "ability of victims to secure their interests through popular political action"<sup>232</sup> and "a paradigmatic example of how statutes, when properly crafted, can and do work."<sup>233</sup> This sentiment is far wide of the mark. To the contrary, the Oklahoma City case provides a compelling illustration of why a constitutional amendment is "necessary" to fully protect victims' rights in this country.

III. STRUCTURAL CHALLENGES

A final category of objections to the Victims' Rights Amendment can be styled as "structural" objections. These objections concede both the normative claim that victims' rights are desirable and the factual claim that such rights are not effectively provided today. These objections maintain, however, that a federal constitutional amendment should not be the means through which victims' rights are afforded. These objections come in three primary forms. The standard form is that victims' rights simply do not belong in the Constitution as they are different from other rights found there. A variant on this critique is that any attempt to constitutionalize victims' rights will lead to inflexibility, producing disastrous, unintended consequences. A final form of the structural challenge is that the Amendment violates principles of federalism. Each of these arguments, however, lacks merit.

A. Claims that Victims' Rights Do Not Belong in the Constitution

Perhaps the most basic challenge to the Victims' Rights Amendment is that victims' rights simply do not belong in the Constitution. The most fervent exponent of this view may be constitutional scholar Bruce Fein, who has testified before Congress that the Amendment is improper because it does not address "the political architecture of the nation."<sup>234</sup> Putting victims' rights into the Constitution, the argument runs, is akin to constitutionalizing provisions of the National Labor Relations Act or other statutes, and thus would "trivialize" the

---

<sup>232</sup>Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 460.

<sup>233</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 56 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl).

<sup>234</sup>Proposals to Provide Rights to Victims of Crime: Hearings on H.J. Res. 71 & H.R. 1322 Before the House Comm. on the Judiciary, 105th Cong. 96 (1997) (statement of Bruce Fein).

Constitution.<sup>235</sup> Indeed, the argument concludes, to do so would “detract from the sacredness of the covenant.”<sup>236</sup>

This argument misconceives the fundamental thrust of the Victims’ Rights Amendment, which is to guarantee victim participation in basic governmental processes. The Amendment extends to victims the right to be notified of court hearings, to attend those hearings, and to participate in them in appropriate ways. As Professor Tribe and I have explained elsewhere:

These are rights not to be victimized again through the process by which government officials prosecute, punish and release accused or convicted offenders. These are the very kinds of rights with which our Constitution is typically and properly concerned—rights of individuals to participate in all those government processes that strongly affect their lives.<sup>237</sup>

Indeed, our Constitution has been amended a number of times to protect participatory rights of citizens. For example, the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments were added, in part, to guarantee that the newly freed slaves could participate on equal terms in the judicial and electoral processes, the Seventeenth Amendment to allow citizens to elect their own Senators, and the Nineteenth and Twenty-Sixth Amendments to provide voting rights for women and eighteen-year-olds.<sup>238</sup> The Victims’ Rights Amendment continues in that venerable tradition by recognizing that citizens have the right to appropriate participation in the state procedures for punishing crime.

Confirmation of the constitutional worthiness of victims’ rights comes from the judicial treatment of an analogous right: the claim of the media to a constitutionally protected interest in attending trials. In Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia,<sup>239</sup> the Court agreed that the First Amendment guaranteed the right of the public and the press to attend criminal trials.<sup>240</sup> Since that decision, few have argued that the media’s right to attend trials is somehow unworthy of constitutional protection, suggesting a national consensus that attendance rights to criminal trials are properly the subject of constitutional law. Yet, the

---

<sup>235</sup>1996 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 8, at 101 (statement of Bruce Fein).

<sup>236</sup>Id. at 100. For similar views, see, for example, Stephen Chapman, Constitutional Clutter: The Wrongs of the Victims’ Rights Amendment, CHI. TRIB., Apr. 20, 1997, at A21; Cluttering the Constitution, N.Y. TIMES, July 15, 1996, at A12.

<sup>237</sup>Tribe & Cassell, supra note 22, at B5.

<sup>238</sup>U.S. CONST. amends. XIV, XV, XIX, XXVI.

<sup>239</sup>448 U.S. 554 (1980).

<sup>240</sup>See id. at 557 (stating that right to attend criminal trials is implicit in guarantees of First Amendment).

current doctrine produces what must be regarded as a stunning disparity in the way courts handle claims of access to court proceedings. Consider, for example, two issues actually litigated in the Oklahoma City bombing case. The first was the request of an Oklahoma City television station for access to subpoenas for documents issued through the court. The second was the request of various family members of the murdered victims to attend the trial, discussed previously.<sup>241</sup> My sense is that the victims' request should be entitled to at least as much respect as the media request. However, under the law that exists today, the television station has a First Amendment interest in access to the documents, while the victims' families have no constitutional interest in challenging their exclusion from the trial.<sup>242</sup> The point here is not to argue that victims deserve greater constitutional protection than the press, but simply that if press interests can be read into the Constitution without somehow violating the "sacredness of the covenant," the same can be done for victims.<sup>243</sup>

Professor Henderson has advanced a variant on the victims'-rights-don't-belong-in-the-Constitution argument with her claim that "a theoretical constitutional ground for victim's rights" has yet to be provided.<sup>244</sup> Law professors, myself included, enjoy dwelling on theory at the expense of real-world issues, but even on this plane, the objection lacks merit. Henderson seems to concede, if I read her correctly, that new constitutional rights can be justified on grounds that they support individual dignity and autonomy.<sup>245</sup> In her view, then, the question becomes one of discovering which policies society should support as properly reflecting individual dignity and autonomy. On this score, there is little doubt that society currently believes that a victim's right to participate in the criminal process is a fundamental one deserving protection. As Professor Beloff has explained at length in his piece

---

<sup>241</sup>See supra Part II.B.

<sup>242</sup>Compare United States v. McVeigh, 918 F. Supp. 1452, 1465–66 (W.D. Okla. 1996) (recognizing press interest in access to documents), with United States v. McVeigh, 106 F.3d 325, 335–36 (10th Cir. 1997) (finding that victims do not have standing to raise First Amendment challenge to order excluding them from trial). See also United States v. McVeigh, 119 F.3d 806, 814–15 (10th Cir. 1997) (recognizing First Amendment interest of press in access to documents, but sufficient findings made to justify sealing order).

<sup>243</sup>In this way, the Amendment does not detract from First Amendment liberties, but expands them. But cf. Henderson, supra note 14, at 418 (suggesting that victims' rights arguably could affect First Amendment liberties, but conceding that "advocates of the Amendment have not argued for a balancing of victim's rights against the rights of the press").

<sup>244</sup>Id. at 384.

<sup>245</sup>See id. at 394–98.

here, "It is time to face the fact that the law now acknowledges the importance of victim participation in the criminal process."<sup>246</sup>

A further variant on the unworthiness objection is that our Constitution protects only "negative" rights against governmental abuse. Professor Henderson writes here, for example, that the Amendment's rights differ from others in the Constitution, which "tend to be individual rights against government."<sup>247</sup> Setting aside the possible response that the Constitution ought to recognize affirmative duties of government,<sup>248</sup> the fact remains that the Amendment's thrust is to check governmental power, not expand it.<sup>249</sup> Again, the Oklahoma City case serves as a useful illustration. When the victims filed a challenge to a sequestration order directed at them, they sought the liberty to attend court hearings. In other words, they were challenging the exercise of government power deployed against them, a conventional subject for constitutional protection. The other rights in the Amendment fit this pattern, as they restrain government actors, rather than extract benefits for victims. Thus, the State must give notice before it proceeds with a criminal trial; the State must respect a victim's right to attend that trial; and the State must consider the interests of victims at sentencing and other proceedings. These are the standard fare of constitutional protections, and indeed defendants already possess comparable constitutional rights. Thus, extending these rights to victims is no novel creation of affirmative government entitlements.<sup>250</sup>

---

<sup>246</sup>Beloof, supra note 9, at 289; see also id. at 328 app. a (compiling victim participation laws from state to state); Sue Anna Moss Cellini, The Proposed Victims' Rights Amendment to the Constitution of the United States: Opening the Door of the Criminal Justice System to the Victim, 14 ARIZ. J. OF INT'L & COMP. L. 839, 868-72 (1997) (discussing fundamental nature of victims' rights); Note, Passing the Victims' Rights Amendment: A Nation's March Toward a More Perfect Union, 24 CRIM. & CIV. CONFINEMENT 647, 681-85 (1998) (same). See generally BELOOF, supra note 128, passim (legal case book replete with examples of victims' rights in process).

<sup>247</sup>Henderson, supra note 14, at 395; see also 1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 7, at 194 (statement of Roger Pilon) (stating that Amendment has "feel" of listing "'rights' not as liberties that government must respect as it goes about its assigned functions but as 'entitlements' that the government must affirmatively provide"); Bruce Shapiro, Victims & Vengeance: Why the Victims' Rights Amendment Is a Bad Idea, THE NATION, Feb. 10, 1997, at 16 (suggesting that Amendment "[u]pends the historic purpose of the Bill of Rights").

<sup>248</sup>See Bandes, The Negative Constitution, supra note 182, at 2308-09 (suggesting that Constitution should be read to recognize and protect affirmative rights).

<sup>249</sup>See Beloof, supra note 9, at 295 n.32.

<sup>250</sup>Perhaps some might quibble with this characterization as applied to a victim's right to an order of restitution, contending that this is a right solely directed against deprivations perpetrated by private citizens. However, the right to restitution is a right

Still another form of this claim is that victims' rights need not be protected in the Constitution because victims possess power in the political process—unlike, for example, unpopular criminal defendants.<sup>251</sup> This claim is factually unconvincing because victims' power is easy to overrate. Victims' claims inevitably bump up against well-entrenched interests within the criminal justice system,<sup>252</sup> and to date, the victims' movement has failed to achieve many of its ambitions. Victims have not, for example, generally obtained the right to sue the government for damages for violations of their rights, a right often available to criminal defendants and other ostensibly less powerful groups. Additionally, the political power claim is theoretically unsatisfying as a basis for denying constitutional protection. After all, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and similar freedoms hardly want for lack of popular support, yet they are appropriately protected by constitutional amendments. A standard justification for these constitutionally guaranteed freedoms is that we should make it difficult for society to abridge such rights, to avoid the temptation to violate them in times of stress or for unpopular claimants.<sup>253</sup> Victims' rights fit perfectly within this rationale. Institutional players in the criminal justice system are subject to readily understandable temptations to give short shrift to victims' rights, and their willingness to protect the rights of unpopular crime victims is sure to be tested no less than society's against government, as it is a right to "an order of restitution," an order that can only be provided by the courts. In any event, even if the restitution right is somehow regarded as implicating private action, it should be noted that the Constitution already addresses private conduct. The Thirteenth Amendment forbids "involuntary servitude," U.S. CONST. amend. XIII, a provision that encompasses private violation of rights. See, e.g., United States v. Kozminski, 487 U.S. 931, 942 (1988) (stating that Thirteenth Amendment extends beyond state action). See generally Akhil Reed Amar & Daniel Widawsky, Child Abuse as Slavery: A Thirteenth Amendment Response to Deshaney, 105 HARV. L. REV. 1359, 1365–68 (1992) (discussing contours of Thirteenth Amendment); Henderson, supra note 14, at 385–86 (noting "good arguments" that Thirteenth Amendment "appl[ies] to the acts of individuals").

<sup>251</sup>See, e.g., 1996 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 8, at 100 (statement of Bruce Fein) (stating that defendants are subject to whims of majority); Henderson, supra note 14, at 398 (asserting that victims' rights are protected through democratic process); Mosteller, supra note 13, at 472 (maintaining that defendants are despised and politically weak, thus needing constitutional protection).

<sup>252</sup>See Andrew J. Karmen, Who's Against Victims' Rights? The Nature of the Opposition to Pro-Victim Initiatives in Criminal Justice, 8 ST. JOHN'S J. OF LEGAL COMMENT. 157, 162–69 (1992) (stating that if victims gain influence in criminal justice process, they will inevitably conflict with officials).

<sup>253</sup>See Abrams v. United States, 250 U.S. 616, 630 (1919) (Holmes, J., dissenting) (stating that we should be vigilant against attempts to infringe on free speech rights, unless danger and threat is immediate and clear); see also Vincent Blasi, The Pathological Perspective and the First Amendment, 85 COLUM. L. REV. 449, 449–52 (1985) (arguing that First Amendment should be targeted to protect free speech rights even at worst times).

willingness to protect the free speech rights of unpopular speakers.<sup>254</sup> Indeed, evidence exists that the biggest problem today in enforcing victims' rights is inequality, as racial minorities and other less empowered victims are more frequently denied their rights.<sup>255</sup>

A final worthiness objection is the claim that victims' rights "trivialize" the Constitution,<sup>256</sup> by addressing such a mundane subject. It is hard for anyone familiar with the plight of crime victims to respond calmly to this claim. Victims of crime literally have died because of the failure of the criminal justice system to extend to them the rights protected by the Amendment. Consider, for example, the victims' right to be notified upon a prisoner's release. The Department of Justice recently explained that

[a]round the country, there are a large number of documented cases of women and children being killed by defendants and convicted offenders recently released from jail or prison. In many of these cases, the victims were unable to take precautions to save their lives because they had not been notified.<sup>257</sup>

The tragic unnecessary deaths of those victims is, to say the least, no trivial concern.

Other rights protected by the Amendment are similarly consequential. Attending a trial, for example, can be a crucial event in the life of the victim. The victim's presence can not only facilitate healing of debilitating psychological wounds,<sup>258</sup> but also help the victim try to obtain answers to haunting questions. As one woman who lost her husband in the Oklahoma City bombing explained, "When I saw my <sup>254</sup>See Karmen, supra note 253, at 168–69 (explaining why criminal justice professionals are particularly unlikely to honor victims' rights for marginalized groups).

---

<sup>255</sup>See NVC RACE SUB-REPORT, supra note 159, at 5 ("[I]n many instances non-white victims were less likely to be provided [crime victims'] rights . . .").

<sup>256</sup>1996 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 8, at 101 (statement of Bruce Fein); see also S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 54 (1998) (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl) ("We should not diminish the majesty of the Constitution . . .").

<sup>257</sup>OFFICE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, NEW DIRECTIONS FROM THE FIELD: VICTIMS' RIGHTS AND SERVICES FOR THE 21ST CENTURY 13–14 (1998); see Jeffrey A. Cross, Note, The Repeated Sufferings of Domestic Violence Victims Not Notified of Their Assailant's Pre-Trial Release from Custody: A Call for Mandatory Domestic Violence Victim Notification Legislation, 34 J. FAM. L. 915, 932–33 (1996) (arguing for legislation that requires notification to victim when assailant is released from prison).

<sup>258</sup>See supra notes 92–99 and accompanying text (discussing how victim participation can have healing effect).

husband's body, I began a quest for information as to exactly what happened. The culmination of that quest, I hope and pray, will be hearing the evidence at a trial."<sup>259</sup> On the other hand, excluding victims from trials—while defendants and their families may remain—can itself revictimize victims, creating serious additional or “secondary” harm from the criminal process itself.<sup>260</sup> In short, the claim that the Victims' Rights Amendment trivializes the Constitution is itself a trivial contention.

B. The Problem of Inflexible Constitutionalization

Another argument raised against the Victims' Rights Amendment is that victims' rights should receive protection through flexible state statutes and amendments, not an inflexible, federal, constitutional amendment. If victims' rights are placed in the United States Constitution, the argument runs, it will be impossible to correct any problems that might arise. The Judicial Conference explication of this argument is typical: “Of critical importance, such an approach is significantly more flexible. It would more easily accommodate a measured approach, and allow for ‘fine tuning’ if deemed necessary or desirable by Congress after the various concepts in the Act are applied in actual cases across the country.”<sup>261</sup>

This argument contains a kernel of truth because its premise—that the Federal Constitution is less flexible than state provisions—is undeniably correct. This premise is, however, the starting point for the victims' position as well. Victims' rights all too often have been “fine tuned” out of existence. As even the Amendment's critics agree, state amendments and statutes are “far easier . . . to ignore,”<sup>262</sup> and for this very reason victims seek to have their rights protected in the Federal Constitution. To carry any force, the argument must establish that the greater respect victims will receive from constitutionalization of their rights is outweighed by the unintended, undesirable, and uncorrectable consequences of lodging rights in the Constitution.

Such a claim is untenable. To begin with, the Victims' Rights Amendment spells out in considerable detail the rights it extends. While this wordiness has exposed the Amendment to the charge of “cluttering

---

<sup>259</sup>1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 110 (statement of Paul Cassell) (quoting victim).

<sup>260</sup>See supra notes 92–99 and accompanying text.

<sup>261</sup>S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 53 (1998) (reprinting Letter from George P. Kazen, Chief U.S. District Judge, Chair, Comm. on Criminal Law of the Judicial Conference of the United States, to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Senate Comm. on the Judiciary 2 (Apr. 17, 1997)).

<sup>262</sup>1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 7, at 147 (statement of Ellen Greenlee, Nat'l Legal Aid & Defender Assoc.).

the Constitution,”<sup>263</sup> the fact is that the room for surprises is substantially less than with other previously adopted, more open-ended amendments. On top of the Amendment’s precision, its sponsors further have explained in great detail their intended interpretation of the Amendment’s provisions.<sup>264</sup> In response, the dissenting Senators were forced to argue not that these explanations were imprecise or unworkable, but that courts simply would ignore them in interpreting the Amendment<sup>265</sup> and, presumably, go on to impose some contrary and damaging meaning. This is an unpersuasive leap because courts routinely look to the intentions of drafters in interpreting constitutional language no less than other enactments.<sup>266</sup> Moreover, the assumption that courts will interpret the Amendment to produce great mischief requires justification. One can envision, for instance, precisely the same arguments about the need for flexibility being leveled against a defendant’s right to a trial by jury.<sup>267</sup> What about petty offenses?<sup>268</sup> What about juvenile proceedings?<sup>269</sup> How many jurors will be required?<sup>270</sup> All these questions have, as indicated in the footnotes, been resolved by court decision without disaster to the Union. There is every reason to expect that the Victims’ Rights Amendment will be similarly interpreted in a sensible fashion. Just as courts have not read the seemingly unqualified language of the First Amendment as creating a right to yell “Fire!” in a crowded theater,<sup>271</sup> they will not construe the Victims’ Rights Amendment as requiring bizarre results.<sup>272</sup>

---

<sup>263</sup>Cluttering the Constitution, N.Y. TIMES, July 15, 1996, at A12 (arguing that political expediency is no excuse for amending Constitution).

<sup>264</sup>See S. REP. NO. 105-409, at 22–37 (1998) (considering specific analysis of each section of Amendment).

<sup>265</sup>See id. at 50–51 (minority views of Sens. Leahy, Kennedy, and Kohl) (arguing that “courts will not care much” for analysis in Senate Report).

<sup>266</sup>See, e.g., U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 790 (1995).

<sup>267</sup>See U.S. CONST. amend. VI (“[T]he accused shall enjoy the right to a . . . trial[] by an impartial jury . . .”).

<sup>268</sup>See Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 66, 73–74 (1970) (holding that jury trial is required for petty offenses as long as possible jail time exceeds six months).

<sup>269</sup>See McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528, 549–51 (1971) (holding that jury trial is not required in juvenile proceedings).

<sup>270</sup>See Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78, 103 (1970) (holding that six-person jury satisfies Sixth Amendment).

<sup>271</sup>See Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52 (1919) (noting that First Amendment does not allow person to yell “Fire!” in crowded theater).

<sup>272</sup>Critics of the Amendment have been forced to use improbable examples to suggest that the Amendment will create unintended difficulties. See 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 117–21 (statement of Paul Cassell). It is interesting on this score to note that the law professors opposed to the Amendment were unable to cite any real-world examples of language in the many state victims’

In any event, the claim of unintended consequences amounts to an argument about language—specifically, that the language is insufficiently malleable to avoid disaster. An argument about inflexible language can be answered with language providing elasticity. The Victims’ Rights Amendment has a provision addressed precisely to this point. The Amendment provides that “[e]xceptions to the rights established by this article may be created . . . when necessary to achieve a compelling interest.”<sup>273</sup> Any parade of horrors collapses under this provision. A serious unintended consequence under the language of the Amendment is, by definition, a compelling reason for creating an exception. Curiously, those who argue that the Amendment is not sufficiently flexible to avoid calamity have yet to explain why the exceptions clause fails to guarantee all the malleability that is needed.

C. Federalism Objections

A final structural challenge to the Victims’ Rights Amendment is the claim that it violates principles of federalism by mandating rights across the country. For example, a 1997 letter from various law professors objected that “amending the Constitution in this way changes basic principles that have been followed throughout American history. . . . The ability of states to decide for themselves is denied by this Amendment.”<sup>274</sup> Similarly, the American Civil Liberties Union warned that the Amendment “constitutes [a] significant intrusion of federal authority into a province traditionally left to state and local authorities.”<sup>275</sup>

The inconsistency of many of these newfound friends of federalism is almost breathtaking. Where were these law professors and the ACLU when the Supreme Court federalized a whole host of criminal justice issues ranging from the right to counsel, to Miranda, to death penalty procedures, to search and seizure rules, among many others? The answer, no doubt, is that they generally applauded nationalization of these criminal justice standards despite the adverse effect on the ability of states “to decide for themselves.” Perhaps the law professors and the ACLU have had some epiphany and mean now to launch an attack on the federalization of our criminal justice system, with the goal of returning power to the states. Certainly quite plausible arguments could be advanced in support of trimming the reach of some federal rights amendments that has produced serious unintended consequences. See id. at 140 (letter from law professors); 1996 House Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 7, at 225 (letter from law professors).

---

<sup>273</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 3 (1999).

<sup>274</sup>1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 140–41 (letter from law professors); see also Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 442 (suggesting that “flexible uniformity” may be accomplished through federal legislation and incentives).

<sup>275</sup>1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 159.

doctrines.<sup>276</sup> But whatever the law professors and the ACLU may think, it is unlikely that we will ever retreat from our national commitment to afford criminal defendants basic rights like the right to counsel. Victims are not asking for any retreat, but for an extension—for a national commitment to provide basic rights in the process to criminal defendants and to their victims. This parallel treatment works no new damage to federalist principles.<sup>277</sup>

Precisely because of the constitutionalization and nationalization of criminal procedure, victims now find themselves needing constitutional protection. In an earlier era, it may have been possible for judges to informally accommodate victims' interests on an ad hoc basis. But the coin of the criminal justice realm has now become constitutional rights. Without those rights, victims have not been taken seriously in the system. Thus, it is not a victims' rights amendment that poses a danger to state power, but the lack of an amendment. Without an amendment, states cannot give full effect to their policy decision to protect the rights of victims. Only elevating these rights to the Federal Constitution will solve this problem. This is why the National Governor's Association—a long-standing friend of federalism—has strongly endorsed the Amendment:

The rights of victims have always received secondary consideration within the U.S. judicial process, even though states and the American people by a wide plurality consider victims' rights to be fundamental. Protection of these basic rights is essential and can only come from a fundamental change in our basic law: the U.S. Constitution.<sup>278</sup>

While the Victims' Rights Amendment will extend basic rights to crime victims across the country, it leaves considerable room to the states to determine how to accord those rights within the structures of

---

<sup>276</sup>See, e.g., Donald A. Dripps, Foreword: Against Police Interrogation—And the Privilege Against Self-Incrimination, 78 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 699, 701–02 (1988) (arguing for reduction of federal involvement in Miranda rights); Barry Latzer, Toward the Decentralization of Criminal Procedure: State Constitutional Law and Selective Disincorporation, 87 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 63, 63–70 (1996) (arguing that state constitutional development has reduced need for federal protections).

<sup>277</sup>If federalism were a serious concern of the law professors, one would also expect to see them supporting language in the Amendment guaranteeing flexibility for the states. Yet, the professors found fault with language in an earlier version of the Amendment that gave both Congress and the states the power to “enforce” the Amendment. See 1997 Senate Judiciary Comm. Hearings, supra note 6, at 141 (letter from law professors).

<sup>278</sup>National Governors Association, Executive Committee Policy 23.1 (“Protecting Victims’ Rights”) (effective winter 1997 to winter 1999) (visited Mar. 3, 1999) <<http://www.nga.org/Pubs/Policies/EC/ec23.asp>>.

their own systems. For starters, the Amendment extends rights to a “victim of a crime of violence, as these terms may be defined by law.”<sup>279</sup> The “law” that will define these crucial terms will come from the states. Indeed, states retain a bedrock of control over all victims’ rights provisions—without a state statute defining a crime, there can be no “victim” for the criminal justice system to consider.<sup>280</sup> The Amendment also is written in terms that will give the states considerable latitude to accommodate legitimate local interests. For example, the Amendment only requires the states to provide “reasonable” notice to victims, avoiding the inflexible alternative of mandatory notice (which, by the way, is required for criminal defendants<sup>281</sup>).

In short, federalism provides no serious objection to the Amendment. Any lingering doubt on the point disappears in light of the Constitution’s prescribed process for amendment, which guarantees ample involvement by the states. The Victims’ Rights Amendment will not take effect unless a full three-quarters of the states, acting through their state legislatures, ratify the Amendment within seven years of its approval by Congress.<sup>282</sup> It is critics of the Amendment who, by opposing congressional approval, deprive the states of their opportunity to consider the proposal.<sup>283</sup>

CONCLUSION

This Article has attempted to review thoroughly the various objections leveled against the Victims’ Rights Amendment, finding them all wanting. While a few normative objections have been raised to the Amendment, the values undergirding it are widely shared in our country, reflecting a strong consensus that victims’ rights should receive protection. Contrary to the claims that a constitutional amendment is somehow unnecessary, practical experience demonstrates that only federal constitutional protection will overcome the institutional

---

<sup>279</sup>S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. § 1 (1999) (emphasis added).

<sup>280</sup>See BELOOF, supra note 128, at 41–43 (discussing and listing various legal definitions of “victim”).

<sup>281</sup>See United States v. Reiter, 897 F.2d 639, 642–44 (2d Cir. 1990) (requiring notice to apprise defendant of nature of proceedings against him).

<sup>282</sup>See U.S. CONST. amend. V; S.J. Res. 3, 106th Cong. Preamble (1999); see also THE FEDERALIST No. 39 (James Madison) (discussing process of amending Constitution).

<sup>283</sup>Cf. RICHARD B. BERNSTEIN, AMENDING AMERICA 220 (1993) (recalling defeat of Equal Rights Amendment in states and observing that “[t]he significant role of state governments as participants in the amending process is thriving”); Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, at 449 n.21 (noting that “unfunded mandates” argument is “arguably inapposite for a constitutional amendment that must be supported by three-fourths of the states since the vast majority of states would have approved imposing the requirement on themselves”).

resistance to recognizing victims' interests. And while some have argued that victims' rights do not belong in the Constitution, in fact the Victims' Rights Amendment addresses subjects that have long been considered entirely appropriate for constitutional treatment.

Stepping back from these individual objections and viewing them as a whole reveals one puzzling feature that is worth a few concluding observations. While some of the objections are thoughtfully advanced,<sup>284</sup> many are contradicted by either specific language in the Amendment or real-world experience with the implementation of victims' rights programs. I hasten to add that others have observed this phenomenon of unsustainable arguments being raised against victims' rights. One careful scholar in the field of victim impact statements, Professor Edna Erez, comprehensively reviewed the relevant empirical literature and concluded that the actual experience with victim participatory rights "suggests that allowing victims' input into sentencing decisions does not raise practical problems or serious challenges from the defense. Yet there is a persistent belief to the contrary, particularly among legal scholars and professionals."<sup>285</sup> Erez attributed the differing views of the social scientists (who had actually collected data on the programs in action) and the legal scholars primarily to "the socialization of the latter group in a legal culture and structure that do not recognize the victim as a legitimate party in criminal proceedings."<sup>286</sup>

The objections against the Victims' Rights Amendment, often advanced by attorneys, provide support for Erez's hypothesis. Many of the complaints rest on little more than an appeal to retain a legal tradition that excludes victims from participating in the process, to in some sense leave it up to the "professionals"—the judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys—to do justice as they see fit. Such entreaties may sound attractive to members of the bar, who not only have vested interests in maintaining their monopolistic control over the criminal justice system, but also have grown up without any exposure to crime victims or their problems. The "legal culture" that Erez accurately perceived is one that has not made room for crime victims. Law students

---

<sup>284</sup>For three particularly thoughtful discussions of criticisms of the Amendment, see Bandes, supra note 11, passim; Mosteller, Unnecessary Amendment, supra note 13, passim; Henderson, supra note 14, passim.

<sup>285</sup>Erez, Victim Participation, supra note 69, at 28; accord Deborah P. Kelly & Edna Erez, Victim Participation in the Criminal Justice System, in VICTIMS OF CRIME 231, 241 (Robert C. Davis ed., 2d ed. 1997).

<sup>286</sup>Id. at 29; see also Erez & Rogers, supra note 69, at 234–35 (noting similar barriers to implementing victims reforms in South Australia); Edna Erez & Kathy Laster, Neutralizing Victim Reform: Legal Professionals' Perspectives on Victims and Impact Statements passim (Dec. 16, 1998) (unpublished manuscript, on file with author) (discussing how and why legal professionals resist reform of criminal justice process through increased victim participation).

learn to “think like lawyers” in classes such as criminal law and criminal procedure, where victims’ interests receive no discussion. In the first year in criminal law, students learn in excruciating detail to focus on the state of mind of a criminal defendant, through intriguing questions about mens rea and the like.<sup>287</sup> In the second year, students may take a course on criminal procedure, where defendants’ and prosecutors’ interests under the constitutional doctrine governing search and seizure, confessions, and right to counsel are the standard fare. Here, too, victims are absent.<sup>288</sup> The most popular criminal procedure casebook, for example, spans some 877 pages;<sup>289</sup> yet, victims’ rights appear only in two paragraphs, made necessary because in California, a victims’ rights initiative affected a defendant’s right to exclude evidence.<sup>290</sup> Finally, in their third year, students may take a clinical course in the criminal justice process, where they may be assigned to assist prosecutors or defense attorneys in actual criminal cases. Not only are they never assigned to represent crime victims, but in courtrooms they will see victims frequently absent, or participating only through prosecutors or the judicial apparatus, such as probation officers.

Given this socialization, it is no surprise to find that when those lawyers leave law school, they become part of a legal culture unsympathetic, if not overtly hostile, to the interests of crime victims.<sup>291</sup> The legal insiders view with great suspicion demands from the outsiders—the barbarians, if you will—to be admitted into the process. A prime illustration comes from Justice Stevens’s concluding remarks in his dissenting opinion in Payne v. Tennessee.<sup>292</sup> He found it almost threatening that the Court’s decision admitting victim impact statements would be “greeted with enthusiasm by a large number of concerned and thoughtful citizens.”<sup>293</sup> For Justice Stevens, the Court’s decision to structure this rule of law in a way consistent with public opinion was “a

---

<sup>287</sup>For a good example of the standard criminal law curriculum, see ROLLIN M. PERKINS & RONALD N. BOYCE, CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE: CASES AND MATERIALS (7th ed. 1989).

<sup>288</sup>For a comprehensive and cogent examination of the absence of victims in criminal procedure courses, see Douglas E. Beloof, Are Your Criminal Procedure Students Out of Touch? A Review of Criminal Procedure Casebooks for Material on the Role of the Crime Victim (unpublished manuscript, on file with author).

<sup>289</sup>YALE KAMISAR ET AL., BASIC CRIMINAL PROCEDURE: CASES, COMMENTS AND QUESTIONS (8th ed. 1994).

<sup>290</sup>See id. at 60 (discussing CAL. CONST. art. I, § 28, the “truth-in-evidence” provision).

<sup>291</sup>One hopeful sign of impending change is the publication of an excellent casebook addressing victims in criminal procedure. See BELOOF, supra note 128.

<sup>292</sup>501 U.S. 808 (1991).

<sup>293</sup>Id. at 867 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

sad day for a great institution.”<sup>294</sup> To be sure, the Court must not allow our rights to be swept away by popular enthusiasm. But when the question before the Court is the separate and ancillary one of whether to recognize rights for victims, one would think that public consensus on the legitimacy of those rights would be a virtue, not a vice. As Professor Gewirtz has thoughtfully concluded after reviewing this same passage, “[T]he place of public opinion cannot be dismissed so quickly, with ‘a sad day’ proclaimed because a great public institution may have tried to retain the confidence of its public audience.”<sup>295</sup>

Justice Stevens’s views were, on that day at least,<sup>296</sup> in the minority, but in countless other ways, his antipathy to recognizing crime victims prevails in the day-to-day workings of our criminal justice system. Fortunately, there is a way to change this hostility, to require the actors in the process to recognize the interests of victims of crime. As Thomas Jefferson once explained,

Happily for us, . . . when we find our constitutions defective and insufficient to secure the happiness of our people, we can assemble with all the coolness of philosophers, and set them to rights, while every other nation on earth must have recourse to arms to amend or to restore their constitutions.<sup>297</sup>

Our nation, through its assembled representatives in Congress and the state legislatures, should use the recognized amending power to secure a place for victims’ rights in our Constitution. While conservatism is often a virtue, there comes a time when the case for reform has been made. Today the criminal justice system too often treats victims as second-class citizens, almost as barbarians at the gates that must be repelled at all costs. The widely shared view is that this treatment is wrong, that victims have legitimate concerns that can—indeed must—be fully respected for the system to be fair and just. The Victims’ Rights Amendment is an indispensable step in that direction, extending protection for the rights of victims while doing no harm to the rights of defendants and of the public. The Amendment will not plunge the criminal justice system into the dark ages, but will instead herald a new age of enlightenment. It is time for the defenders of the old order to recognize these facts, to help swing open the gates, and welcome victims to their rightful place in our nation’s criminal justice system.

---

<sup>294</sup>Id. (Stevens, J., dissenting).

<sup>295</sup>Gewirtz, supra note 76, at 893.

<sup>296</sup>Cf. South Carolina v. Gathers, 490 U.S. 805, 811–12 (1989) (finding victim impact statements in capital cases unconstitutional); Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496, 508 (1987) (same).

<sup>297</sup> Thomas Jefferson, Letter to C.W.F. Dumas, Sept. 1787, reprinted in THE JEFFERSONIAN CYCLOPEDIA 198 (John P. Foley ed., 1900).

APPENDIX A. TEXT OF THE PROPOSED VICTIMS' RIGHTS AMENDMENT

106TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION

S. J. RES. 3

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 19, 1999

Mr. KYL (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. INOUE, Mr. DEWINE, Ms. LANDRIEU, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. MACK, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. HELMS, Mr. FRIST, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. LOTT, and Mrs. HUTCHISON) introduced the following joint resolution; which was read twice and referred to the
C o m m i t t e e o n
the Judiciary

---

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid for all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress:

“ARTICLE—

“SECTION 1. A victim of a crime of violence, as these terms may be defined by law, shall have the rights:

“to reasonable notice of, and not to be excluded from, any public proceedings relating to the crime;

“to be heard, if present, and to submit a statement at all such proceedings to determine a conditional release from custody, an acceptance of a negotiated plea, or a sentence;

“to the foregoing rights at a parole proceeding that is not public, to the extent those rights are afforded to the convicted offender;

“to reasonable notice of and an opportunity to submit a statement concerning any proposed pardon or commutation of a sentence;<sup>298</sup>

“to reasonable notice of a release or escape from custody relating to the crime;

“to consideration of the interest of the victim that any trial be free from unreasonable delay;

“to an order of restitution from the convicted offender;

“to consideration for the safety of the victim in determining any conditional release from custody relating to the crime; and

“to reasonable notice of the rights established by this article.

“SECTION 2. Only the victim or the victim’s lawful representative shall have standing to assert the rights established by this article. Nothing in this article shall provide grounds to stay or continue any trial, reopen any proceeding or invalidate any ruling, except with respect to conditional release or restitution or to provide rights guaranteed by this article in future proceedings, without staying or continuing a trial. Nothing in this article shall give rise to or authorize the creation of a claim for damages against the United States, a State, a political subdivision, or a public officer or employee.

“SECTION 3. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation. Exceptions to the rights established by this article may be created only when necessary to achieve a compelling interest.

“SECTION 4. This article shall take effect on the 180th day after the ratification of this article. The right to an order of restitution established by this article shall not apply to crimes committed before the effective date of this article.

“SECTION 5. The rights and immunities established by this article shall apply in Federal and State proceedings, including military proceedings to the extent that the Congress may provide by law, juvenile justice proceedings, and proceedings in the District of Columbia and any commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.”

---

<sup>298</sup>This clause was added during deliberations in the Subcommittee on the Constitution, Federalism, and Property Rights.

APPENDIX B: DO VICTIM IMPACT STATEMENTS
INCREASE THE NUMBER OF DEATH SENTENCES?

While much speculation has been bandied about concerning the effect of victim impact statements on capital sentences, surprisingly little hard research on the subject has been conducted. The available empirical research on victim impact statements in noncapital cases has generally found, at most, a modest effect on sentence severity.<sup>299</sup> This Appendix offers some tentative empirical observations that support the same conclusion about victim impact statements in capital cases.

In 1991, the Supreme Court specifically approved the admission of victim impact statements in capital cases in Payne v. Tennessee.<sup>300</sup> This decision triggered a number of scholarly articles suggesting that the effect would be to make it easier for prosecutors to obtain death sentences,<sup>301</sup> but empirical follow-up on this question has been scant. One possible way of researching the assertion is simply to look at the total number of death sentences returned after Payne to determine whether they increased. In the same vein, it may be useful to examine whether the number of death sentences decreased after Booth v. Maryland,<sup>302</sup> the Supreme Court's decision four years earlier in 1987 barring victim impact statements in capital cases. Such time series

---

<sup>299</sup>See supra notes 62–73 and accompanying text (asserting that empirical evidence suggests that victim impact statements might have modest effect on sentence severity).

<sup>300</sup>501 U.S. 808, 832–33 (1991) (holding that Eighth Amendment does not prohibit State from choosing to admit certain evidence with regard to victim's personal characteristics or impact of crime).

<sup>301</sup>See, e.g., Jonathan H. Levy, Note, Limiting Victim Impact Evidence and Argument After Payne v. Tennessee, 45 STAN. L. REV. 1027, 1046 (1993) (asserting that victim impact statements will motivate jurors to impose death penalties out of emotion); Beth E. Sullivan, Note, Harnessing Payne: Controlling the Admission of Victim Impact Statements to Safeguard Capital Sentencing Hearings from Passion and Prejudice, 25 FORDHAM URB. L.J. 601, 630 (1998) (noting that victim impact statements create greater possibilities for prosecutors to seek death penalty).

<sup>302</sup>482 U.S. 496, 502–03 (1987) (holding that victim impact statements create risk that “a death sentence will be based on considerations that are ‘constitutionally impermissible or totally irrelevant to the sentencing process’”).

analyses have been used to investigate the impact of other legal changes<sup>303</sup> and constitute a standard way of analyzing legal reforms.<sup>304</sup>

The time series for death sentences returned in this country over the last quarter century is shown in Figure 1.<sup>305</sup>

FIGURE 1: DEFENDANTS SENTENCED TO DEATH
(1973 TO 1997)

---

<sup>303</sup>See, e.g., Paul G. Cassell & Richard Fowles, Handcuffing the Cops? A Thirty-Year Perspective on Miranda's Harmful Effects on Law Enforcement, 50 STAN. L. REV. 1055, 1072–74 (1998) (using time series analysis to consider effects of Miranda); Raymond A. Atkins & Paul H. Rubin, Effects of Criminal Procedure on Crime Rates: Mapping of the Consequences of the Exclusionary Rule passim (1998) (unpublished manuscript, on file with author) (utilizing time series analysis to chart exclusionary rule's harmful effect on crime rates).

<sup>304</sup>See Donald T. Campbell, Reforms as Experiments, 24 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 409, 417 (1969) (concluding that time series analysis is common method of investigating reform measures); D.J. Pyle & D.F. Deadman, Assessing the Impact of Legal Reform by Intervention Analysis, 13 INT'L REV. L. & ECON. 193, 194–96 (1993) (concluding that time series analysis is common method for analyzing economic and social data).

<sup>305</sup>The data is taken from BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, CAPITAL PUNISHMENT 1997, at 13 (1998) [hereinafter CAPITAL PUNISHMENT (year)].

As the chart reveals, after an initial shake-out period in the mid-1970s,<sup>306</sup> the number of death sentences imposed generally climbed through 1986. Then, in 1987, the Court held in Booth that victim impact statements could not be used in capital cases. Death sentences declined slightly. Finally, in 1991, the Court reversed itself in Payne, allowing such statements. Death sentences thereafter increased modestly before turning to a level only slightly above that before Payne. The raw data would therefore suggest the possibility of a short term, meager association between victim impact statements and death sentences.

A small note on timing is in order. Both Booth and Payne were handed down by the Court in mid-year (on June 15 and June 27 respectively). Thus, the vertical lines in Figure 1 depicting the “last pre-Booth year” and the “last pre-Payne” year are drawn to show the last year in which death sentences were unaffected by the ensuing Supreme Court decision, assuming the Court’s decision affected capital cases as soon as it was announced. These timing assumptions are open to question. It is possible that prosecutors “anticipated” Booth by restricting their use of victim impact statements to avoid the possibility of reversal. The Court agreed to review the case on October 15, 1986,<sup>307</sup> so perhaps the last year entirely unaffected by Booth was 1985, not 1986. Also, Payne may not have resulted in the immediate use of victim impact statements. Defendants might have continued to have been tried under the old law for months afterwards because of the problem of giving notice to them that such evidence would be introduced<sup>308</sup> and of adding authorizations for the use of impact statements.<sup>309</sup>

Before a causal inference could be drawn that the fluctuations shown in Figure 1 are attributable to the Court’s decision on victim impact statements, alternate causes would need to be carefully and fully <sup>306</sup>In Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 256–57 (1972), the Court concluded that the death penalty as then administered was arbitrary and capricious. States responded with new statutes more carefully defining death penalty offenses, reflected in an increasing number of capital sentences from 1973 through 1975. In 1976, the Court upheld some of these statutes but struck down those with mandatory features. Compare Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 206–08 (1976) (upholding Georgia’s death penalty statute), with Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 304–05 (1976) (invalidating North Carolina’s mandatory death penalty statute). The invalidation of those statutes likely accounts for the drop in death penalties in 1976 and 1977.

---

<sup>307</sup>479 U.S. 882, 882 (1986) (granting writ of certiorari).

<sup>308</sup>But cf. Free v. Peters, 12 F.3d 700, 703 (7th Cir. 1993) (holding that defendant could not argue against application of Payne on ground that it was new rule); State v. Card, 825 P.2d 1081, 1088–90 (Idaho 1991) (applying Payne retroactively).

<sup>309</sup>See, e.g., UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-3-207(2)(a)(iii) (Supp. 1998) (allowing use of impact statements); Crime Victim Rights Amendments, ch. 352, § 5, 1995 Utah Laws 1361 (amending this provision).

considered.<sup>310</sup> I leave this task to others. One issue that should be examined is whether the number of homicides changed during the period, particular homicides for which the death penalty was a serious prospect.<sup>311</sup> Another possibility is that internal changes in sentencing procedures within large states returning the most capital sentences caused the fluctuations.<sup>312</sup> Still another obvious alternate causality is other Supreme Court decisions around the time of Booth and Payne that might have made it easier or harder for prosecutors to obtain capital sentences. The Supreme Court death penalty jurisprudence has not been, shall we say, a model of perfect consistency over time. At almost the same time that the Court blocked the use of victim statements in Booth, it also increased the ability of defendants to introduce mitigating evidence. In 1985, the Court held that defendants must be given access to a competent psychiatrist at trial and sentencing if mental state is an issue.<sup>313</sup> In 1986, the Court significantly expanded the types of mitigating evidence that defendants could introduce by invalidating contrary state evidentiary rules.<sup>314</sup> And in 1989, the Court expanded the circumstances in which juries should be instructed about the effect of mitigating evidence.<sup>315</sup> It is possible that these decisions, and not Booth, explain the 1987–1990 dip in death penalties. The Court also handed down other decisions favorable to death penalty prosecutions at about

---

<sup>310</sup>For an introduction to some of these issues, see Cassell & Fowles, supra note 304, at 1107–19; John J. Donohue III, Did Miranda Diminish Police Effectiveness?, 50 STAN. L. REV. 1147, 1149–51 (1998); Paul G. Cassell & Richard Fowles, Falling Clearance Rates After Miranda: Coincidence or Consequence?, 50 STAN. L. REV. 1181, 1181 (1998).

<sup>311</sup>Murder rates went up modestly from 1984 to 1991. See FED. BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, UNIFORM CRIME REPORTS: CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES 1993, at 284.

<sup>312</sup>For example, much of the 1986–87 drop in death penalties is apparently explained by changes in Illinois. Compare CAPITAL PUNISHMENT 1986, supra note 306, at 5 tbl.4 (25 death sentences in Illinois in 1986), with CAPITAL PUNISHMENT 1987, supra note 306, at 6 tbl.4 (11 death sentences in Illinois in 1987). Much of the 1990–91 rise in death penalties is apparently explained by changes in Florida. Compare CAPITAL PUNISHMENT 1990, supra note 306, at 6 tbl.4 (31 death sentences in Florida in 1990), with CAPITAL PUNISHMENT 1991, supra note 306, at 8 tbl.4 (45 death sentences in Florida in 1991).

<sup>313</sup>See Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 84–87 (1985) (holding that denial of access to psychiatrist was violation of due process).

<sup>314</sup>See Skipper v. South Carolina, 476 U.S. 1, 4–8 (1986) (excluding mitigating evidence violated Eighth Amendment).

<sup>315</sup>See Penry v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302, 337–40 (1989) (holding that sentencing body must be allowed to consider mental retardation as mitigating factor).

the time of Payne that might explain the rise in death penalties in recent years.<sup>316</sup>

These and other potentially complicating factors would have to be assessed before any firm conclusions could be reached about the aggregate death penalty data plotted in Figure 1. Nevertheless, even assuming that all other factors but the Court's victim impact decisions could be ruled out as causes of the changes, the relative magnitude of the changes appear to be, at most, modest.<sup>317</sup>

Until we have further analysis of the data, lack of firm proof that Payne increased the number of death penalty convictions should count heavily against Professor Bandes and others who argue against admitting victim impact statements because of their effects on juries.<sup>318</sup> Allowing surviving family members to make impact statements clearly improves the perceived fairness of the process<sup>319</sup> and we have no proof that juries have been influenced, let alone unfairly influenced.<sup>320</sup>

---

<sup>316</sup>See, e.g., Graham v. Collins, 506 U.S. 461, 475–78 (1993) (restricting Penry); Johnson v. Texas, 509 U.S. 350, 369–73 (1993) (distinguishing Penry); Schad v. Arizona, 501 U.S. 624, 646–48 (1991) (holding that defendant was not necessarily entitled to instructions on every lesser included offense).

<sup>317</sup>The 1986 data divided by the 1988 data (the first full year under Booth), suggests that death penalties fell by 4% when victim impact evidence was banned in Booth. The 1992 data divided by the 1990 data (the first full year under Payne), suggests that death penalties rose by 15% when victim impact evidence was allowed in Payne. Using a longer time horizon, the 1997 data divided by the 1990 data suggests only a 2% rise in death penalty convictions after Payne. These calculations assume, in addition to the many other caveats noted in text, no confounding trends.

<sup>318</sup>See Susan Bandes, Reply to Paul Cassell: What We Know About Victim Impact Statements 1999 UTAH L. REV. 543 passim.

<sup>319</sup>See supra notes 81–90 and accompanying text.

<sup>320</sup>Cf. supra notes 27–99 and accompanying text (arguing that, even if Payne increased death sentences, this was a just result).